

Techno-change

The difference over twenty years, in the making of ET since 1985, includes the vanishing away of paper files. In a cabinet beside my desk I have A–Z files for the many people who literally ‘wrote’ – that is, typed – to me on paper. I almost never consult any of those files now, and don’t remember when I last added a sheet to them. Instead, of course, I check my email, which piles up electronically in non-real space somewhere inside this machine in front of me. And, though I strive to keep my records straight, I seldom check back very far or go into e-files of old e-mails. And, most days, whether in Cambridge or in Hong Kong, I read daily e-abstracts from my much-prized Edinburgh newspaper, The Scotsman, and don’t recall when I last saw, leave alone bought and read, a conventional paper edition of it.

O tempora, o mores, sez I, but how many people nowadays, in the Western world, can easily manage this venerable Latin lament for the passing of the good old days. Sic transit gloria mundi.

But to my point. Although end-products may look much the same, the difference between 1985 and 2005 in the making of English Today (and comparable publications worldwide) is immense. Consider, for example, keys. Not keys of the door, but typewriter keys and those little indented pads that pass for keys on my laptop – which, incidentally, I never use on my lap (and therefore think of as a portable desk-top). Indeed, it’s hard now to think back to sit-up-and-beg typewriters with keys that moved and ribbons that spooled from one side to the other. But ever since my first computer, an IBM desktop that by now would be deemed pretty clunky if I still had it, I’ve virtually (a slippery word) forgotten the awful wasteful business of mistyping, ripping out the paper, scrunching it into a ball, and having to start the whole page again.

Haven’t done that in donkeys’ years. Prehistoric, in fact. But like everybody else I’m talking here about a keyboard which isn’t much like a board and has no keys at all, and even it’s built-in mouse isn’t a mouse and has no tail at all. Yet I may still be invited to ‘right-click’ or ‘left-click’ the ‘mouse’, and by and large I do it without giving the matter any thought at all.

All of which has happened in the brief two-decade lifetime of ET, whose whole process of production now involves virtually no paper at all until first the galleys then the page-proofs appear. And finally an electronic package goes to press, and the fairly traditional format you are holding in your hand emerges – unless of course you read ET articles on-screen, in which case you probably don’t see Comment.

The good news, however, is that the global range of the present issue is as wide and varied as ever, a state of affairs that I can (thankfully) describe as ‘technology-neutral’.

Tom McArthur

The editorial policy of English Today is to provide a focus or forum for all sorts of news and opinion from around the world. The points of view of individual writers are as a consequence their own, and do not reflect the opinion of the editorial board. In addition, wherever feasible, ET generally leaves unchanged the orthography (normally British or American) and the usage of individual contributors, although the editorial style of the journal itself is that of Cambridge University Press.

English Today (ISSN 0266-0784) is published quarterly by Cambridge University Press, The Edinburgh Building, Shaftesbury Road, Cambridge CB2 2RU, UK / Cambridge University Press, 40 West 20th Street, New York, N.Y. 10011-4211.

© Cambridge University Press 2005. No contents may be reproduced by any means without the permission of Cambridge University Press.

Subscriptions: The 2005 subscription price (excluding VAT) for four issues for libraries and institutions, which includes print and electronic access, is £93 outside of North America; £32 for individuals; £24 for students and the retired. The electronic-only price available to institutional subscribers is £79. Prices include delivery by air where appropriate. Apply to Jane Crossland at the above address.

Advertising Sales: write to the Advertising Promoter at the above address. Email: journals_marketing@cup.cam.ac.uk

USA, CANADA AND MEXICO:

Subscriptions: The 2005 subscription price (excluding VAT) for four issues for libraries and institutions, which includes print and electronic access, is $147 in USA, Canada and Mexico; $50 for individuals; $37 for students and the retired. The electronic-only price available to institutional subscribers is $120. Apply to Marianne Headrick at Cambridge University Press, 40 West 20th Street, New York, N.Y. 10011-4211.

Advertising Sales: write to the Advertising Coordinator at the above address.

Periodicals postage paid at New York, NY and at additional mailing offices.

POSTMASTER: Send address changes to English Today, Cambridge University Press, 100 Brook Hill Drive, West Nyack, N.Y. 10994-2133.

Japanese prices for institutions are available from Kinokuniya Company Ltd, P.O. Box 55, Chitose, Tokyo 156, Japan.

Contacting the Editor: Email Dr Tom McArthur at <Scotsway@aol.com> or write to him at 22–23 Ventress Farm Court, Cherry Hinton Road, Cambridge CB1 8HD, UK. Tel 01223 245934.

Internet access This journal is included in the Cambridge Journals Online service which can be found at <http://uk.cambridge.org/journals>. For further information on other Press titles access <http://uk.cambridge.org>.

Designed and typeset by Peter Ducker.

Printed in the United Kingdom at the University Press, Cambridge.