Symposium on STATE and LOCAL Government Administration

The Southern Review of Public Administration will sponsor an issue devoted to state and local government administration. Proposals for manuscripts to be included in the symposium are being solicited by the co-editors, Donato Pugliese of Georgia State University and Dale Krane of Mississippi State University.

The focus of the symposium will be on the administration and management of state government and local jurisdictions. Proposals are encouraged on the following topics: the executive management of state agencies, the initiation of policy and program change, mediation of inter-agency conflict, and the interaction of local governments with state-level units. Topics also encouraged include: executive-legislative relations, administration of the legislature, the governor's office or the state court system.

Proposed manuscripts should address a significant problem in state and local administration and develop a conceptual framework or a set of hypotheses which are examined in the light of the experience of several states. However, if a proposed article is a case study of one state or local government, it should also be based on a particular approach and utilize a methodology which would permit others to replicate the study in other states or localities. Potential contributors should consult previous issues of the Southern Review of Public Administration for directions on matters of style.

Individuals wishing to have a manuscript considered for inclusion in the symposium should send a two- to three-page precis to either: Professor Donato J. Pugliese, Department of Political Science, Georgia State University, Atlanta, Georgia 30303, or Professor Dale Krane, Department of Political Science, Mississippi State University, P.O. Drawer PC, Mississippi State, Mississippi 39762. The deadline is March 30, 1981.

WOMEN and Politics Symposium Issue

Manuscripts are solicited for a special symposium issue of Women & Politics dealing with the general subject of "biopolitics and gender." Papers may be either theoretical or empirical, although preference will be given to papers that are in principle subject to future research verification. Empirical techniques might be experimental, survey- and questionnaire-based, historical, or ethological/observational.

The term "biopolitics" connotes an emphasis on a biological perspective, which may, depending on the subject matter, be evolutionary, physiological, ethological or in some other way relevant to the life sciences. Interdisciplinary papers are thus extremely relevant.

Gender-related differences (or the lack thereof) need not be exclusively related to adult political behavior, but may deal with relevant sociopolitical behavior of persons of all ages.

Completed manuscripts should be available for a peer review process by March 1, 1981 at the latest. Submission of a final collection of manuscripts for the symposium is projected for August 1, 1981. Manuscripts should conform to the stylistic format of the journal, and be

PUBLIC EMPLOYMENT in Europe Study

The Centre for the Study of Public Policy at the University of Strathclyde has launched a major cross-national study of the growth of public employment in major western nations since 1951. The object of the study is to examine systematically and comprehensively the different ways in which changes have occurred in different sectors of public employment, to consider the causes, and also to think about their consequences for public policy in the 1980s.

In the pilot stage of the project, now completed, attention has been devoted to developing a systematic framework for analyzing data from five different countries: Britain, Italy, Sweden, Ireland and the United States. A striking feature of the initial analysis is the extent to which there is no common pattern across these five nations on most major features of public employment. The definition of public employment used is broad, that is, covering up to 33 percent of the labor force in Sweden and 30 percent in Britain.

Five studies have been published:

No. 61. Changes in Public Employment: A Multi-Dimensional Comparative Analysis, by Professor Richard Rose. L3.0 (L3.50 ex UK).

No. 62. United Kingdom Public Employment: Patterns of Change, 1951-1976, by Richard Parry. L1.50 (L1.75 ex UK).

No. 63. Public Employment in the United States: Growth and Change, by Professor B. Guy Peters. L2.25 (L2.75 ex UK).

No. 64. The State as Paymaster: The Italian Experience, 1951-1976, by Andrea Cendali Pignatelli. L1.50 (L1.75 ex UK).

No. 65. The Territorial Dimension in United Kingdom Public Employment, by Richard Parry. L1.50 (L1.75 ex UK).

Copies of the studies published and further details about the project are available from Professor Richard Rose, Director, Centre for the Study of Public Policy, University of Strathclyde, 16 Richmond Street, Glasgow G1 1XQ.

Data on INCOME MAINTENANCE Experiments Available

Longitudinal monthly data files from the Seattle and Denver Income Maintenance Experiments (SIME/DIME) are available for public use from Mathematica Policy Research, Policy Studies Division.

The SIME/DIME experiments were conducted as part of a study sponsored by the U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare to test the effects of guaranteed income on labor force participation, family stability, and related socioeconomic behavior. The study encompassed several thousand low-income families from both high and low unemployment areas, with a disproportionately large number of minority and single-parent families represented.

The experiments began in 1969 in Seattle and in 1970 in Denver. Extensive data on income, employment, and family characteristics were collected approximately every four months from experimental and control groups at each site over a period of several years.

The available SIME/DIME files provide six years of monthly observations on key demographic characteristics, detailed sources of earned and unearned income, employment and unemployment history, and selected assets data.

The data have been used for research in the areas of AFDC and Food Stamp participation and turnover; family formation and dissolution; poverty measurement and income instability; impact of a guaranteed income on labor supply; and characteristics of working women versus women on welfare.

SIME/DIME data are available in two formats: a Family-Person format, containing information on families and family members, and a Composite Principal Person version, containing data on family heads. (To protect privacy, names and addresses are not included.)

Cross-Site Analysis File Also Available

Mathematica Policy Research has also recently completed development of a Cross-Site Analysis File containing commonly-formatted data from four of the income maintenance experiments sponsored by the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services during the past 12 years, including the New Jersey and Gary (Indiana) experiments in addition to SIME/DIME.

The Cross-Site Analysis File has been designed to provide variables relevant to analysis of labor force participation, income patterns, and family composition of the male and female heads of families enrolled at the beginning of the four experiments in either the control or experimental samples.

The data are organized by quarters of experimental time. Most variables, such as earnings or unearned income sources, are provided for 17 quarters, including four quarters prior to enrollment in the experiment, 12 quarters when experimental treatment families were eligible to receive negative income tax payments, and one quarter after disenrollment from the experimental plan.

The intent in the design of the Cross-Site File was to provide variables in a common format across all four experiments and to construct variables according to the same concepts and definitions. The goal of a common format has been achieved; the goal of common definitions has been achieved in large part. Definitional differences remaining that may be important to analysis are noted in the documentation of the file.

WOMEN and POLITICS Series

Women and Politics would like to have a series in the news and notes section of its journal devoted to spotlighting the contributions of women who have made contributions to the social sciences in earlier times. The pieces in the series will be between 2½ to 5 pages, double-spaced, in length.

Martin Gruberg, University of Wisconsin, Oshkosh, Oshkosh, Wisconsin, an editorial board member, has agreed to coordinate this series. Readers are encouraged to send him their nominations for inclusion in the series as well as their profiles of pioneers. (One forthcoming sketch will be of Sophonisba Breckenridge.) The series will not be limited to those who were professional political scientists nor to those who held academic positions.

COURT MANAGEMENT Symposium Call for Papers

The First National Symposium on Court Management is a national conference addressing the relationship between court management and the effectiveness and independence of the judiciary. Sponsored by five professional associations of judicial administration, the Symposium has been scheduled for September 1981 in San Diego, California.

The Symposium promises to be one of the most significant events in the judicial administration in many years. It will bring together judges, court managers, academicians, students, and representatives of consumer and public interest groups. Several issues critical to the future of court administration will be discussed. A clear consensus will be developed on how management can make the courts more efficient and independent to better serve their crucial role in our democracy.

Papers for the Symposium are being solicited from the academic community, judges, court managers, and others associated with judicial administration. In addition, papers will be solicited from students in schools of public and judicial administration. All papers submitted to the Symposium should address one or more of the following issues:

The impact of the rapidly changing nature of society on the courts;

The effectiveness of court managers in judicial systems;

The elements needed to foster productive relationships between court managers and judges who work together for constructive change in the courts; and

The role of the public in our judicial systems. How can citizens, court managers, and judges improve the performance of the judicial branch of government?

Each author must specify which of the topics is primarily addressed in his or her paper. The topics should be considered with respect to the relationship of management and the maintenance of a strong and independent judiciary.

All papers will be reviewed by a panel consisting of members of the academic community and practitioners in court management. The Symposium Steering Committee will review recommendations made by the panel and will make the final decision on all papers.

The authors of the best papers on each topic, in both the general and student categories, will be awarded a $100 honorarium and reimbursement for all expenses requisite to their attendance at the Symposium. Additionally, they may be asked to present their paper at the Symposium. The Symposium Steering Committee, however, reserves the right not to make an award for a best paper in any of the topics or categories.

Papers must be typewritten, double-spaced, on 8½ by 11 inch paper. They should be no longer than 35 pages, including quotations and footnotes. All papers may be printed and distributed in conjunction with activities of the Symposium. Authors should maintain the copyright to their papers if they so desire (subject to use by the Symposium). All papers must be sent to Mr. W. Lee Powell, National Center for State Courts, 300 Newport Avenue, Williamsburg, Virginia 23185. All papers must be post-marked no later than March 31, 1981.

CIVIL RIGHTS Research Review Call for Papers

Civil Rights Research Review (formerly the Clearinghouse for Civil Rights Research) invites papers on the topic, "Measuring Race and Sex Discrimination." Of particular interest are pieces on such questions as how one determines that affirmative action programs are "working," what are appropriate measures or evidence of discrimination, whether they are the same for women and minorities, and whether segregation (e.g., in schools or housing or occupations) is a measure of discrimination. Manuscripts may review or present research, but should not exceed 20 pages double-spaced. Send two copies by February 20th to: Diana Pearce, Editor, Center for National Policy Review, Catholic University Law School, Washington, D.C. 20064.

Comparative URBAN Research Call for Contributions

Comparative Urban Research invites contributions for a special issue on "The Political Economy of Urbanization in Asia" to appear in spring 1981. Deadline is August 15, 1981. For further information contact special issue editor: Bruce London, Department of Sociology, Mary Washington College, Fredericksburg, Virginia 22401.

Conference Group on REPRESENTATION AND ELECTORAL SYSTEMS

APSA members interested in getting on the mailing list for occasional newsletters of the Group should notify Richard G. Smolka, School of Government and Public Administration, College of Public and International Affairs, American University, Washington, D.C. 20016. WAR COLLEGE Visiting Scholar

The Strategic Studies Institute of the U.S. Army War College seeks an established scholar with a demonstrated list of publications to serve as a visiting research scholar during the 1982-83 academic year. Interest in and knowledge of national security affairs is essential. Applicant should have in mind several relatively brief analytical policy papers to be written during the 12-month period of residence that are of mutual interest and compatible with the mission of SSI. The visiting scholar may also be expected to work on directed projects or studies, either independently or as a member of a study group. Security clearance required (if selected) for all SSI members.

SSI is an Army studies group of about 40 professionals, almost equally divided between civilian and military. The Institute conducts studies for the U.S. Army Deputy Chief of Staff for Operations and Plans which evaluate: long-range trends and conditions that impact on Army strategy and policy; economic, political, technological, sociological, and military factors of strategic importance to the U.S. Army; factors bearing on national and military strategy; and external factors that affect the nature and use of the U.S. Army in peace and war.

The government will pay scholar's salary for one year (including summer salary) through the scholar's permanent university. Also, moving costs to and from Carlisle, Pennsylvania, will be paid. Complete vita and proposal for research projects must arrive prior to May 15, 1981. Persons interested should write to: Director, Strategic Studies Institute, U.S.

Longman Studies in POLITICAL COMMUNICATION and Policy

A new series by Longman's, edited by Jarol B. Manheim of Virginia Polytechnic Institute and State University, will address major issues in the study of political communication. The present series will focus instead primarily on issues in communication policy, on the institutions that make or are affected by decisions on those issues, and on more general patterns and effects of political communication. The purpose will be to focus attention on the points of interface between the communications system and the political system in both an American and an international context. Intended for an audience which includes the scholar, the practitioner, and the policy maker, works in the series will first be issued in a quality hardcover edition with provision for a subsequent paperback edition where appropriate.

Interested authors are encouraged to contact the publisher or series editor for submission guidelines. All proposals and manuscripts will be reviewed by the publisher, the series editor, and by other subject matter experts as necessary. A publication decision will ordinarily be forthcoming in four to six weeks. Manuscripts accepted for publication will be published approximately nine months from delivery of final copy.

The following list is offered for purposes of suggestion only. Proposals for books on topics other than those listed below are welcome and will be considered on their merits and appropriateness for the series.

The role of industry and public interest groups in shaping communication policy.

The role of the media in policy making, either with respect to particular issues or more generally.

Evaluation of specific communication policies; applications to communication policy of general approaches to understanding or evaluating public policy.

The government information operation, how agencies or branches of government attempt to shape their public images, the effects of their efforts.

The role of communications patterns and technology in empirical democratic theory.

The impact of political communication policy on candidate recruitment and selection; the impact of campaign spending laws on political candidates' communication strategies.

The role of communications media, language and the like in political development.

Information colonialism, an assessment of the impact of Western ownership and control of communications technology and programming on the Third World.

POLICY STUDIES Organization

The Policy Studies Organization is anticipating another active year in 1981. There are eight issues of the Policy Studies

Journal scheduled for publication, which makes PSJ the most frequently published quarterly journal. The extra four issues result from special funding, and they are distributed without charge to members and subscribers beyond the $12 annual dues. The symposia which will be included in the eight issues and the symposia editors are as follows:

1. "Social Values and Public Policy," William Dunn.
2. Non-symposium issue, Robert Albritton.
3. "Criminal Corrections and Public Policy," Jameson Doig.
4. "Urban Services Distribution," Richard Rich.
5. "Communities in Economic Crisis," Steven Redburn and Terry Buss.
6. "Higher Education Policy," Sam Gove and Tom Stauffer.
7. "Rural Policy Problems," Don Hadwiger.
8. "Poverty Policy," Richard Goldstein and Steve Sachs.

The regular issues will also include non-symposium articles, literature reviews, and news relevant to the policy studies field. These symposia are funded by such sources as University of Pittsburgh, Daniel and Florence Guggenheim Foundation, National Institute of Justice, National Institute of Mental Health, Ohio Department of Mental Health, U.S. Department of Education, Department of Agriculture, and the Community Services Administration. They will also result in expanded booklength versions in the PSO-Lexington series.

In addition to the PSJ journal issues and the PSO-Lexington books, the Policy Studies Organization will in 1981 be adding to its PSO-Sage series of Yearbooks in Politics and Public Policy. These will include Fiscal Stress and Public Policy under the editorship of Charles Levine and Irene Rubin, and The Scope of Government edited by Robert Lineberry and Valerie Bunce. PSO will also publish a Social Science Utilization Directory, which will include entries from political scientists, sociologists, economists, and psychologists in government positions, reporting how their social science background have been and could be relevant to their work. Also scheduled for publication is a Policy Studies Bibliographies Directory, which will contain bibliographies on a variety of general approaches to policy studies and specific policy problems. Related 1980-81 books with heavy PSO involvement include The Policy Studies Handbook (Lexington-Heath, 1980), The Encyclopedia of Policy Studies (Marcel Dekker, 1981), and Policy Evaluation: Making Optimum Decisions (Praeger, 1981), edited by Stuart Nagel, who is the PSO publications coordinator.

The Policy Studies Organization is currently headed by Charles Jones as president, with Robert Lineberry as vice-president and president-elect, and Stuart Nagel as secretary-treasurer. Dues are $12 per year, which covers the quarterly journal, about four special issues, two directories, and one-third discounts on the books. Subscriptions can be obtained from the Policy Studies Organization, 361 Lincoln Hall, University of Illinois, Urbana, Illinois 61801.

AAAS AWARD for Scientific Freedom and Responsibility

The American Association for the Advancement of Science (AAAS) has established a new award for Scientific Freedom and Responsibility. The award, which will be presented for the first time at the 1981 AAAS Annual Meeting in Washington, D.C., will consist of a plaque and a cash prize of $1,000. The award was established by action of the AAAS Board of Directors in June 1980.

Under the criteria approved by the AAAS Board, the purpose of the award is to honor scientists and engineers whose actions, often at significant personal cost, have outstandingly exemplified principles of scientific freedom and responsibility. The new prize will recognize scientists and engineers who have:

- acted to protect the public's health, safety, or welfare; or
- focused public attention on important potential impacts of science and technology on society by their responsible participation in public policy debates; or
- established important new precedents in carrying out the social responsibility

ties or in defending the professional freedom of scientists and engineers.

Members of the AAAS or its affiliated professional societies are invited to nominate candidates for the award by providing the following information: the name and address of their nominee; a brief statement (about 100 words) describing the action(s) of their nominee which they believe merits recognition; general background information about their candidate (no longer than three pages); and names and addresses of one or two other persons (one of whom must be a scientist) who support the nomination. Nominations will be reviewed by the Scientific Freedom and Responsibility Award Committee, who may recommend a nominee or nominees to the Chairman of the AAAS Board for final approval.

Nominations should be sent to: Scientific Freedom and Responsibility Award, American Association for the Advancement of Science, 1515 Massachusetts Avenue, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20005. Deadline for receipt of nominations is June 30, 1981.

FACULTY Exchange Center Housing Exchange

The Faculty Exchange Center has announced that in addition to its faculty exchanges service it will initiate a housing exchange service. BENJAMIN BARBER Novel

Benjamin Barber, professor of political science and a Guggenheim Fellow for 1980-81 has published a novel called Marriage Voices (Summit Books/Simon and Schuster). Prepublication reviews have called it "extremely powerful," "extraordinary" and "a brilliant dissection of modern marriage," but—Barber warns—it is not a political novel and is without a clear ideological perspective (other than what critics on the left might call a bourgeois interior psychology).

INTERNATIONAL Organization Journal

While maintaining its original emphases on the workings of international institutions, the journal International Organization has over the last several years expanded its interests. Our aim is to contribute to knowledge and the analysis of particular issues through the publication of first-rate articles on any and every aspect of international relations. In recent issues the journal has published articles dealing with questions of political economy, foreign policy, empirical as well as normative theory, and both history and comparative politics illuminating international issues. We have been less interested in policy advocacy, historical description, and highly technical material that leaves implicit its importance for the analysis of international relations.

All suitable manuscripts are reviewed anonymously by at least two members of the journal's Editorial Board, and authors will receive the journal's decision within eight weeks of receipt, accompanied by careful and detailed commentary by the reviewers. We keep our backlog deliberately short, and authors may expect prompt publication after the acceptance of a manuscript in final form.

International Organization's editorial offices have moved from Stanford University, where the journal was edited by Professor Robert Keohane, to Cornell University, where Professor Peter Katzenstein has taken over editorial responsibility. The new editor welcomes submissions of manuscripts, which should be sent in triplicate to: Professor Peter Katzenstein, Editor, International Organization, 190 Uris Hall, Cornell University, Ithaca, New York 14853.

NATIONAL RESEARCH COUNCIL Ph.D. Survey

The National Research Council of the National Academy of Sciences will be conducting the biennial survey of Ph.D.s in the sciences, engineering, and the humanities again in March-April of 1981. Sponsored by the National Science Foundation, the National Endowment for the Humanities, the National Institutes of Health, and the Department of Energy, the survey yields national data that are used by government agencies, academic and industrial employers and others in providing guidance for the analyses and the development of educational policies and programs.

If you are a member of the survey sample, you are urged to complete your questionnaire and return it to the National Research Council. Your cooperation is essential in maintaining an accurate information system which is used to assess the nation's human resources in the sciences, humanities, and engineering fields.

HUMANITIES in Society

Humanities in Society, a journal of the Center for the Humanities, Doheny Hall, University of California, Los Angeles, California 90007, has announced that it will publish a special issue on social justice in the liberal states and welcomes submissions for consideration by October 1, 1981. For further information write to Mark E. Kahn at the Center.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS Committee Publication

Representative Clement J. Zablocki, Chairman of the House of Representatives Committee on Foreign Affairs, has announced the publication by the Committee of a second series of historical volumes of previously unpublished transcripts of Committee executive session hearings covering the period 1951-1956.

Included are texts of legislative and other documents relevant to the subject matter of the hearings. Introductory and background material for the volumes was prepared by a group of faculty members and research assistants from the University of Pittsburgh.

A limited number of copies of Volumes IX through XVI will be available immediately at the House Foreign Affairs Committee, 2170 Rayburn House Office Building, Washington, D.C. 20515. Volumes XVII and XVIII are scheduled to be printed by the end of January. Additional copies of all volumes will be on sale at the Superintendent of Documents, U.S. Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C. 20402.

DIRECTORY OF LIBRARIANS AND INFORMATION SCIENTISTS IN POLITICAL SCIENCE

The Association has published a new Directory of Librarians and Information Scientists in Political Science. The volume, edited by Robert Goehlert, Indiana University, contains biographical information on 124 librarians and information scientists in political science. It may be ordered from the Association, prepaid, $5 for members; $7 for non-members.

The aim of this Directory is to form a network of librarians and information scientists willing to provide reference and research assistance in the field of political science. This Directory is intended to serve political scientists and librarians by facilitating the exchange of information and ideas about the bibliography of political science, methods of library instruction and research. The Directory is expected to aid political scientists who are planning to do research at another library or special collection and want to contact the librarian who works in that geographical area. By knowing the name of a librarian at a particular library or research center, political scientists can inquire directly about an institution's resources or seek reference assistance.
