THE INARTICULATE RENAISSANCE
Language Trouble in an Age of Eloquence
 Carla Mazzi

“Carla Mazzi’s important and beautifully written book charts the ‘unjuncting’ of articulate speech in an age conventionally known for its rhetorical eloquence. She investigates the shadow side of early modern communication, the forms of utterance suppressed and occluded by traditional celebrations of the period’s rhetorical fluency: mumbling, stuttering, sensation that hovers at the interface of language and the body, utterances that exist between silence and speech, emotion that overwhelms words, linguistic incoherence, syntactical confusion.”—Elizabeth Harvey, University of Toronto

2008 | 320 pages | 5 illus. | Cloth | $65.00

EXOTIC NATION
Maurophilia and the Construction of Early Modern Spain
 Barbara Fuchs

“Barbara Fuchs gives us a lively and illuminating look into the many ways in which Moorishness remained a vivid presence in early modern Spanish culture. Theoretically sophisticated, but rooted in the careful examination of the texts of quotidian life, Exotic Nation takes the reader beyond Orientalism into a profound rethinking of the relationship of early modern Spain to other European nations and of the role of Jewish, African, and Moorish elements in Spain’s own self-construction.”—Jean E. Howard, Columbia University

2008 | 224 pages | 12 illus. | Cloth | $45.00

FROM PARIS TO POMPEII
French Romanticism and the Cultural Politics of Archaeology
 Göran Blix

“A rich, well-informed, and engaging analysis that combines the aesthetic, the epistemological, the historical, and the political in a way that is both original and strong. This book opens up new perspectives on frequently studied authors, and it makes very useful associations between very different levels of literary and scientific productions.”—Jacques Neefs, The Johns Hopkins University and Paris 8 Université de Vincennes à Saint-Denis
