□ ALZHEIMER'S DISEASE TREATMENT & FAMILY STRESS: DIRECTIONS FOR RESEARCH

Enid Light, Ph. D., and Barry Lievowitz, Ph. D

This book strives to increase our understanding of and ability to reduce the negative health/mental health consequences experienced by many family caregivers of dementia patients. This highlights the need for researchers to take a multidisciplinary approach. This volume marks the recognition of a tremendous opportunity to advance the care of Alzheimer's patients and their families.

□ STRESS AND COPING IN LATER-LIFE FAMILIES

Mary Ann Farris Stephens, Janis H. Crowther,
Steven E. Hobfoll and Daniel L. Tennenbaum

*Series in Applied Psychology:
Social Issues and Questions*

In large part, this volume is a product of the 1989 Kent Psychology Forum, where outstanding scholars presented their ideas about various facets of later-life families, challenged the ideas of others, and had their own ideas challenged in return. The result is a rich blend of empirical findings and theorizing about this multifaceted and intriguing area.

□ ALZHEIMER DISEASE: CURRENT RESEARCH IN EARLY DIAGNOSIS

Robert Becker and Ezio Giacobini

This book addresses the early clinical diagnosis of Alzheimer disease. Written to evaluate the relevance of current research on the subject, it uncovers the present lack of clinical utility in research methodologies such as neuroimaging, drug challenges, electroencephalographic studies, and brain biopsy. The essays addressing each of these issues will provide the reader with a useful perspective on the role of each technology in clinical practice and an in-depth introduction to the technologies and research findings in each of the areas reviewed.
