Editorial Policy and Practices

Theatre Survey welcomes submission of scholarly articles with an historical bent on a wide range of subjects, including American, African, Asian, British, European theatre. Unsolicited articles are welcome from independent scholars and from theatre historians at any academic level. The journal publishes the best work it receives, whether the methodology employed be traditional historicist, new historicist, feminist, marxist, structuralist, semiotic, or whatever. The journal willingly prints illustrations. Potential contributors should note that the journal will not ordinarily consider analyses of single plays. Articles will normally run between 15 and 50 typescript pages, but shorter (usually factual) notes are also welcome. Bibliographic documentation should be according to the Chicago Manual of Style. Decisions normally take 1-3 months during the academic year; they may take longer over the summer. Submission of two or three copies of an essay will speed our decision. MSS will not be returned unless accompanied by sufficient return postage. Once accepted, articles available in compatible electronic form will receive priority in the print queue. We use WordPerfect, but are happy to accept convertible files in other programs, or ASCII files.
