The Dynamics of Nuclear Proliferation

STEPHEN M. MEYER

It is time to step back from the emotions and rhetoric surrounding the nuclear arms debate and to test empirically the assumptions that underlie the proliferation process. Stephen Meyer accomplishes no less in this work that objectively and systematically examines theories relating to the spread of nuclear weapons. Must a nation that acquires the technical capability to manufacture nuclear weapons eventually do so? Or do political, military, social, and economic considerations determine whether a nation will 'go nuclear'? Meyer explores the most prominent variants of these two hypotheses and applies the factors obtained to data he has compiled in order to determine which are more significant. The result is the first empirical model, using statistical techniques, that explains why particular countries became nuclear powers when they did. Meyer then uses his model to forecast which countries are likely to develop nuclear capabilities in the future.

The Spiral of Silence

Public Opinion – Our Social Skin

ELISABETH NOELLE-NEUMANN

First published in German in 1980, this lively work contends that public opinion is dominated by a 'spiral of silence'. Most people avoid expressing their beliefs openly unless assured of support among their hearers. This may suggest, falsely, that a position has few adherents. Conversely, those who perceive widespread support for their opinions tend to voice them more often, creating reinforcement which, in turn, portrays such opinions as stronger than they actually are and ultimately leads to a change in public opinion. Collating evidence from historical, philosophical and current political sources, Noelle-Neumann asserts that recognition of this effect is the best defence against manipulation by it.

Births, Deaths and Taxes

The Demographic and Political Transitions

A. F. K. ORGANSKI, JACEK KUGLER, J. TIMOTHY JOHNSON
& YOUSSEF COHEN

The authors present, for the first time, empirical evidence that state growth and the centralisation of political power have a direct effect on a country's mortality and fertility rates: as the scale of a government grows, a nation's vital rates will decline. They have also constructed a reliable measure of political development and capacity, making it possible to compare accurately the effectiveness of different political systems. A major contribution to the field, this work will have considerable repercussions for years to come.

The Foreign Policy Systems of North and South Korea

BYUNG CHUL KOH

Three decades after the Korean Armistice, the Korean peninsula remains a potential tinderbox. Across a fragile Demilitarized Zone more than a million heavily armed men confront one another, fueled by a deep-seated mutual distrust and backed by an entangling network of military alliances with the US, the USSR, and the PRC. In this book, the first in-depth comparative study of the key dimensions of the foreign policy systems of North and South Korea, Professor Koh analyses strategic, operational and tactical decisions, placing special emphasis on the reunification problem. His work transcends the traditional chronological study, for he offers an enduring perspective on the roots of the conflict and his analysis is enriched by his own long exposure to the developments in the two Korean states.

Marxist Thought in Latin America

SHELDON B. LISS

No school of thought, except perhaps Positivism, has been more pervasive among intellectuals in Latin America than Marxism. The area's social, political, and economic problems have not been solved under capitalism, nor have the techniques of its Positivist thinkers yielded a programme for thorough reform. Thus Marxism's utopian promise holds considerable appeal for many of Latin America's intellectuals. This volume explores the major ideas of a select group of people who call themselves Marxists, though they often represent diverse branches of the philosophy. Liss endeavours to establish each writer's individual ideologies, political and social objectives, approaches to Marx, unique theories of society, and views on power and institutions. He examines, where possible, each thinker's concept of a 'socialist person', ideas on revolution, organisational efforts, how the person's ideas were implemented and whether or not they endured, and the historical significance of his ideas and actions.

Failure of a Dream?

Essays in the History of American Socialism

Revised edition

JOHN H. M. LASLETT & SEYMOUR MARTIN LIPSET, Editors

Why has socialism never gained a permanent foothold in American politics, while it flourishes in other nations? This provocative question is debated here by a distinguished group of political scientists, historians and leading socialists from the Old Left and the New, drawn from both Europe and America.

'One of the rare works which not only includes material from both the conservative mainstream of academia and from Marxist and non-Marxist socialists but which also puts the various theoretical perspectives in dialogue with one another . . . a most usable collection of essays.' Contemporary Sociology

Notes for Contributors

1 All contributions should be sent to: The Editor, British Journal of Political Science, University of Essex, Wivenhoe Park, Colchester, Essex CO4 3SQ. They should not be sent to the Cambridge University Press.

2 Articles submitted to the Journal should in general be between 5,000 and 12,000 words (or equivalent in tables and figures) in length. An abstract not exceeding 120 words is required.

3 Notes and comments are welcome. A Note should contain a body of original information, a new method for doing something or a new idea (speculation, argument, proof, etc.) presented in a brief and unadorned form without inessential commentary. Comments containing criticisms of articles published in the Journal and additional thoughts on them will be considered for early publication, especially if they are short – say, under 1,000 words.

4 Most issues of the Journal contain a Review Article – either a detailed discussion of a single book or a review of the state of some area of the discipline. Review Articles submitted without prior consultation will be considered for publication, but in their own interest contributors would be well advised not to prepare a Review Article specially for the Journal without first getting in touch with the Editor.

5 Contributors should note the Journal's editorial policy, which is as stated inside the front cover.

6 Authors of articles and Review Articles receive twenty-five free offprints. Additional copies may be bought if they are ordered at proof stage.

7 Submission of an article is taken to imply that it has not been previously published and is not being considered for publication elsewhere. In the interest of authors, copyright is normally assigned to the Cambridge University Press.

8 Contributions intended for publication should be submitted IN TRIPLICATE. Contributions must be typed and may be reproduced in any clearly legible form. The preferred size of paper is A4 (8½ × 11½ in), but quarto (8 × 10 in) or the US standard size (8½ × 11 in) will also be accepted. Because of postage costs, manuscripts not accepted for publication are not normally returned to the author unless their return is specifically requested.

9 The entire material of any article, including footnotes, quotations, appendices, etc., should be double spaced, with left-hand margins of at least 1½ in. The preferred treatment of footnotes is that they should be numbered consecutively in the text and typed all together at the end, beginning on a fresh page.

10 Anyone who is preparing a manuscript for submission to the Journal is urged to follow the Journal's style sheet, which covers a number of detailed points concerning footnotes, punctuation, spelling, etc. Copies of the style sheet can be obtained from the Editor. English spelling, not American, should be adopted. Footnote references should always contain, in the case of books, the name of the author as it appears on the title page, the full title including any subtitle, the place of publication, the name of the publisher and the date of publication, and, in the case of articles, the name of the author, the full title, the name of the journal, the volume number, the year and the page reference (number of first and last page).

11 First proofs may be read and corrected by contributors provided that they can give the Editor an address through which they can be reached without delay and can guarantee to return the corrected proofs to the Editor, by air mail where appropriate, within ten days of receiving them. The master proof will always be sent directly to the Editor by the printer; contributors will receive duplicates.
