Shaping the World Economy

Jan Tinbergen. Twentieth Century Fund. 330 pp. $2.25, $4.00

The principle of "one world," generally accepted as a political ideal, has to be extended to include the economic sphere in order to ease the main international tensions, says the author of this study. Among the problem areas examined in detail here are those created by the developing nations and the two competing economic systems.

Studies of War

P. M. S. Blackett. Hill and Wang. 242 pp. $3.95

A collection of articles, lectures and memoranda in which a prominent British physicist considers the problems of nuclear and conventional warfare both in their military and international and social aspects.

The Politics of Hope

Arthur M. Schlesinger, Jr. Houghton Mifflin. 298 pp. $5.00

This volume contains a group of essays, many dating from the '50's, which reflect an "American Liberal's... viewpoint of Hope in an age of Memory." Among the topics considered by the author are "Leadership and History," "Liberalism and Policy," "Men and Ideas," and "Politics and Culture."

Political Ideology

Robert E. Lane. Free Press of Glencoe. 509 pp. $10.00

Taped interviews with fifteen Americans formed the basis for this study of the "ideology of the common man"; the central ideals he finds expressed "in our political culture," the manner in which his ideals are shaped by his experiences, and the "implication of both the ideology and its underlying components on the functioning of a democracy."

The Strategy of Disarmament

Henry W. Forbes. Public Affairs Press. 158 pp. $3.75

The methods of disarmament between the wars and proposals for disarmament since 1945 are discussed by the author who concludes that "at the present time disarmament in the conventionally understood sense is virtually impossible." Limited war, as a substitute for disarmament, is the subject of a final chapter.

The Cuban Invasion

Karl E. Meyer and Tad Szulc. Praeger. 160 pp. $3.95

Events and miscalculations of the 1961 Cuban invasion are recounted and analysed by two veteran newsmen in Latin American affairs.
