SECRET Chinese military papers have recently been published. What do they reveal about the state of China's army?

THESE are important questions with interesting answers and are examined in The China Quarterly's first two issues of 1964.

THE FRENCH ARMY IN MEXICO

1861-1867

A STUDY IN MILITARY GOVERNMENT

(= Studies in American History, II)

by

JACK AUTREY DABBS

1963, 340 pp., 10 plates, map

Dgds 30,-, US $ 8,35

The establishment of a military government on foreign soil taxes the discipline and training of an army to its utmost. In periods of actual combat no one expects anything else. But after the wave of combat has passed and an army has seized control of a land, what happens to the inhabitants?

The French Intervention in Mexico (1861-1867) provides a good case study of the problems facing an army of occupation: military combat, occupation of foreign soil, opposition by both organized and disorganized resident inhabitants, support by some elements of the residents, efforts to substitute military personnel for civil officers, assumption of sovereign rights to military chain of command, attempts to establish a friendly, substitute civil government that will allow the military to withdraw from those functions, the problems of fighting and governing at the same time, withdrawal from an area without leaving a competent body behind, and cultural conflicts arising from the occupation of foreign lands. Since military government is a highly authoritarian operation, particular focus was necessary in this study on the personalities representing the high military command; in this case Marshal François-Achille Bazaine is a key figure. With the romantic figures of Maximilian and his Empress – the tragic fate of the royal pair has always made an appeal to popular imagination – and, on the other hand, the stern and unbending stoicism of Juárez, the cast for the drama seems virtually complete.

The present account is primarily based on the official papers of Marshal Bazaine, a great many of which fortunately have survived. Further sources were the records of the royal family in Vienna, scattered records left by Austrian and Belgian officials, official French records – consisting mostly of correspondence between Paris and the headquarters in Mexico –, the official Mexican records in the capital, and personal correspondence and memoirs, printed and unprinted, of French soldiers and officials, important Mexican figures, etc.
