Actively Seeking Work?

The Politics of Unemployment and Welfare Policy in the United States and Great Britain

Desmond King

"Hunting down the scrounger and castigating the workshy runs deep through U.K. and U.S. attitudes to unemployment. . . .

As King demonstrates with an impressive range of archival evidence from both sides of the Atlantic, this approach has meant the development of employment strategies more concerned with the distribution and value of social benefits than with job placement for those who find themselves unemployed. . . . A cogent argument that deserves to be read by public policymakers."

The DIFFIDENT NATURALIST

Robert Boyle and the Philosophy of Experiment

ROSE-MARY SARGENT

In this provocative reassessment of one of the quintessential figures of early modern science, Rose-Mary Sargent explores Robert Boyle's philosophy of experiment—examining the philosophical, legal, experimental, and religious traditions that played a part in shaping his experimental thought and practice. Drawing on the full range of his published works, as well as on his unpublished notebooks and manuscripts, Sargent traces the roots of Boyle's philosophy in his early life, in his own religious ideals, and in the work of Bacon, Descartes, and Galileo.

The Victorians and the Stuart Heritage

Interpretations of a Discordant Past

Timothy Lang

This book explores how a group of nineteenth-century British historians came to terms with one of the formative periods in their nation's past—the seventeenth century in general and the era of Cromwell and the Puritans in particular. Included are well-known figures such as Macaulay and Carlyle, who are of interest to literary scholars as well as to historians, and more specialized writers such as Henry Hallam and S. R. Gardiner.

Sir Joshua Reynolds

The Subject Pictures

Martin Joseph Postle

Reynolds' subject pictures were among the most widely discussed British paintings of the century. This is the first book to concentrate on this important aspect of Reynolds' work. Covering the period from 1760 to 1830, it shows the way in which these pictures were inextricably linked to Reynolds' aims and practices as a painter, and to the way in which he was perceived by his peers.

Culture and Society in the Stuart Restoration

Literature, Drama, History

Gerald MacLean, Editor

Questions of national identity and difference came to be framed in terms of international trade and imperial ambition during the Stuart Restoration. Thus religious and royal authority gave way before the advance of a secular literary culture geared to the demands of a developing commercial and imperial nation.

Ideologies of the Raj

Thomas R. Metcalf
This book examines how the British sought to justify their rule over India. Metcalf argues that two divergent strategies were devised to legitimate their authority: the one defined characteristics that the Indians shared with the British, while the other emphasized qualities of enduring "difference." Over time the differences came to predominate.

Women and Philanthropy in Nineteenth-Century Ireland

Maria Luddy

This book examines the involvement of women in charity work in nineteenth-century Ireland. The author claims that sectarianism dominated women's philanthropic activity, and analyzes the work of women in areas of moral reform, such as prostitution and prison work. The book concludes that the most progressive developments were brought about by nonconformists, who later became pioneers in the cause of suffrage.

Literature, Education, and Romanticism

Reading as Social Practice, 1780-1832

Alan Richardson

This innovative study addresses issues in literary and educational history never examined together before. Richardson argues that transformations in schooling and literacy in Britain between 1780 and 1832 helped shape the provision of literature as we now know it. He charts how social relations were transformed through reading and education, and Romantic texts are reinterpreted in the light of historical and social issues.
