Women in the Earliest Churches

BEN WITHERINGTON, III

An examination of the roles and functions which women assumed in the early Christian communities from AD 33 to the Council of Nicea. It surveys the views of women held by certain New Testament writers including Paul and the four Evangelists. Ben Witherington argues that early Christianity was neither unreservedly patriarchal nor adamantly feminist in its orientation, but steered a middle course which affirmed the new religious roles and functions for women.

Josephus' Description of the Essenes Illustrated by the Dead Sea Scrolls

TODD S. BEALL

Since the discovery of the Dead Sea Scrolls in 1948 and the identification of the Qumran community by a majority of scholars, a whole new treasure trove of information concerning the Essenes has become available. The author of this book is thus able to demonstrate that, on the whole, Josephus has given us a trustworthy account of one of the major Jewish sects at the time of Jesus.

The Qumran Community

Edited by MICHAEL A. KNIBB

This book provides a new translation of substantial extracts from the Qumran Writings together with an exegetical commentary. The intention is to provide a source-book for the study of the Qumran community by means of a series of extracts from the most important of the sectarian writings that were found at Qumran. The importance of the book lies above all in the exegetical commentary in which the attempt has been made to deal with the major interpretative problems raised by each of the writings translated here.

Early Rabbinic Writings

HYAM MACCOBY

This book provides a valuable and introductory guide to the full range of Rabbinic writings which are often cited in the New Testament and Old Testament studies. It also corrects many mistaken views about Rabbinic Judaism arising from outdated conceptions of the relationship between Christianity and Judaism.
