

INTERNATIONAL LEGAL MATERIALS

Statement of Editorial Policy

International Legal Materials, a core publication of the American Society of International Law, reproduces the significant documents representing the diverse nature of international law. These documents range from traditional international law topics such as trade, jurisdiction, and maritime law, to contemporary developments such as environmental law, women's rights, war crimes, and transborder electronic commerce.

International Legal Materials serves a global readership of legal scholars, government officials, and private practitioners who share a common interest in the law. Consequently documents are selected from world-wide sources on the basis of their present and future legal significance. Purely political or issue-advocacy documents are excluded, as are draft laws, unless they are part of an ongoing process of legal codification, or will soon appear in a final form which is substantially the same as the draft.

International Legal Materials serves a dual function — to inform readers about important trends in the law, and to provide a lasting archive of documents in a widely recognized and citable form. Most documents include a content summary permitting quick access to articles or sections within the text. In addition, many documents include an Introductory Note written by an expert in that area of the law. In order to ensure publication of materials at the forefront of international legal discourse, all documents are reproduced from the best available source, whether obtained electronically or in traditional printed form. Translations are usually unofficial and should not be considered authoritative, unless otherwise indicated.

International Legal Materials is compiled with the assistance of its Corresponding Editors around the world and is collected and prepared for publication in Washington, D.C. by a staff of attorney/editors acting with the advice of the Editorial Advisory Committee.

Volume XXXVII reflects advances in our method of production designed to help ensure timely publication and presents a new format designed to improve readability. A great deal of thought and care have been expended in providing the quality of publication you have grown to expect, while making use of technological advances that were simply not available when ILM debuted in 1962. We look forward to continuing to do our best for you.

ERRATUM

The correct citation for the Yugoslavia Tribunal is the International Tribunal for the Prosecution of Persons Responsible for Serious Violations of International Humanitarian Law Committed in the Territory of the Former Yugoslavia since 1991. The citation on page 488 and the table of contents of the March 1998 issue contained a typographical error. We regret any inconvenience this may have caused.
