Blood on the Snow

The Carpathian Winter War of 1915

Graydon A. Tunstall

“With bold, powerful brush strokes, Tunstall paints a picture of horrendous death in the Carpathian Mountains. Austria-Hungary and Russia each lost about one million men, making the battle more costly than the better known ones of Verdun and the Somme 1916. Meticulously researched and well written, this is military history at its finest. A must read.”—Holger H. Herwig, author of The Marne, 1914

“Tunstall has made a major statement here in reconstructing the vast clash of Austrian and Russian arms in the Carpathians during the early winter months of 1915. Snow falls on the mountains, wolves howl in the distance, and two doomed armies learn the truth of the old adage, ‘there is no enemy more formidable than nature.’ An essential book for all World War I libraries.”—Robert M. Citino, author of The German Way of War

“Sheds light on one of the most titanic and bloody campaigns of World War I. . . . A must read for anyone interested in the Great War’s Eastern front.”—Richard L. DiNardo, author of Breakthrough: The Gorlice-Tarnow Campaign, 1915
