BEGINNING NEXT MONTH: an unprecedented three-part analysis of contemporary China based upon hundreds of in-depth interviews with those who know China best — the Chinese. The authors, Ivan and Miriam London, are unlike most "China experts" in that they depend neither upon well-guided tours by the Peking regime nor upon often fanciful speculations from afar. They rely rather on the stories of the thousands of Chinese who have emigrated, legally and illegally, over the last ten years. Through a rigorous methodology that presses for details, challenges contradictions, and maintains a constant cross-check of accounts, the Londons now emerge with what is probably the most complete study of everyday life in China that is available today. Moving, terrifying, sometimes humorous, but always informative, these articles, the editors believe, represent a major breakthrough in our understanding of the Chinese reality. Next month: Famine in the Land of Plenty.
