Front cover: Dunnicaer promontory fort, Aberdeenshire, Scotland. Recent excavations by the University of Aberdeen have helped contextualise the discovery of five Pictish stones at the sea stack in the nineteenth century. The excavations have revealed a wealthy, late Roman-period defended settlement. The symbol-stones appear to have been built into the ramparts. The site has been severely affected by coastal erosion. (See Noble et al. in this issue for further details.)
