The Elements of Life

Biography and Portrait-Painting in Stuart and Georgian England

RICHARD WENDORF, Harvard University

In this bold new study, Wendorf compares two arts—biography and portrait-painting, and reveals that despite their obvious differences, visual and verbal portraits often shared similar assumptions about the representation of historical character. 1990 275 pp.; 40 b&w halftones $59.00

Church and State in Early Modern England, 1509-1640

LEO F. SOLT, Indiana University, Bloomington

"I know of no modern work that covers the same ground.... It reflects the author's subtle mind, understanding of the period, and careful judgment. His use of printed sources, weaving them into his narrative in order to capture the precise flavor and meaning of authors and ideas, is masterful."
—Martin J. Havran, University of Virginia 1990 288 pp. $35.00

Gentlemen and Barristers

The Inns of Court and the English Bar 1680-1730

DAVID LEMMINGS, University of Adelaide

In this original study, Lemmings shows how the four inns of court declined from their former splendor during the late seventeenth century until, by the reign of George II, they were principally dormitories and offices for a mass of non-lawyers. (Oxford Historical Monographs) 1990 344 pp.; illus. $55.00

The Thatcher Effect

A Decade of Change

Edited by DENNIS KAVANAGH, University of Nottingham, and ANTHONY SELDON

This collection of essays examines the principal changes that have occurred in Britain since 1979, the role of the Thatcher government in promoting these changes, and the extent to which change would have occurred regardless of the government in power. 1989 376 pp.; illus. paper $12.95

London Charity in the Eighteenth Century

Donna T. Andrew

In this study of voluntary charities in eighteenth-century London, Donna Andrew reveals the interaction between charitable theorizing and practical efforts to improve the condition of the poor. The author argues that it is impossible to comprehend eighteenth-century charity without taking into account its perceived social utility.

Sex and Suffrage in Britain, 1860–1914

Susan Kingsley Kent

"[Kent's] starting point is that Christabel Pankhurst's cry, 'Votes for Women; Chastity for Men,' is less the manic aberration that historians have assumed than a statement of one motivating theme of the women's movement. Many women detected as a source and prop of their subordination, the sexual double standard. . . . [Kent argues] originally and convincingly [that] 'private' and 'public' experiences were not distinct but closely interrelated; and many feminists perceived that the public world could not be reshaped without the private changing also."

Controversy in Victorian Geology

The Cambrian-Silurian Dispute

James A. Secord

"This book aims at serious goals and achieves all of them. It provides a fundamentally new interpretation of the Cambrian-Silurian dispute based on exacting research and thoughtful interpretation. It also relates the dispute both to the general social background of British geology and to the distinctive personal experiences of Sedgwick and Murchison. Secord writes clear, vigorous prose and provides plenty of helpful illustrations. One cannot ask for more."

Historians on Historians

"Although each book fits its subject into a place in the story of English historiography, the real interest in all [of them] turns out to be biographical. Not only the character and talents but the personal vicissitudes of the historian . . . are fascinating."

NAMIER

Linda Colley

"Countering the modern verdict of 'clever but overrated,' [Colley] feels that Namier's explication of the decay of the old European order is 'one of the best introductions to this century's insecurity, alienation, and angst.' . . . one of the best introductions to Namier."

MACAULAY

Owen Dudley Edwards

Macaulay's historical works have delighted readers and irritated academics ever since they were written. Edwards argues for Macaulay's serious purpose in writing – the drive to address the widest possible audience, and to draw his readers into sharing his own passionate love of learning and history.

1989 ISBN 0-312-02727-3 $24.95

HUME

Nicholas Phillipson

Phillipson's portrait of Hume is that of an intellectual who believed profoundly in the civilizing powers of culture, and who spent his actual career trying to manipulate the culture of his contemporaries by teaching them to think historically about themselves and their country's people.

GIBBON

Making History

Roy Porter

Porter's incisive portrait examines the special – and controversial – qualities of Gibbon as historian, showing the man, the mind and the history as inevitably, complexly intertwined.

ACTON

Hugh Tulloch

"Power tends to corrupt and absolute power corrupts absolutely." Such is the sole popular legacy of Lord Acton. Tulloch redeems Acton to history, depicting him as a thinker who addressed himself obsessively to matters of vital and lasting historical importance.
