CONTRIBUTORS TO THIS ISSUE

Robert Brentano is Professor of History at the University of California, Berkeley. He is the author of York Metropolitan Jurisdiction and Papal Judges Delegate (1279-1296), has published a collection of sources entitled The Early Middle Ages 500-1000, and has written a number of articles on medieval history. In 1965-66 he had a year of productive scholarship in Italy on a Guggenheim Fellowship.

Carolyn A. Edie, who is Associate Professor of History at the University of Illinois, Chicago Circle, has contributed to the American Historical Review. She is currently working on a study of Parliament's challenge to the royal prerogative in the Restoration period.

John F. C. Harrison, Professor of History at the University of Wisconsin, is the author of Learning and Living, 1790-1960 and the editor of Society and Politics in England, 1780-1960. He has recently published an article in Victorian Studies. In 1963-64 he conducted research in London on an S.S.R.C. Fellowship.

Alfred F. Havighurst is Professor of History at Amherst College. He is the author of Twentieth-Century Britain and is now at work on a study of the journalistic career of Henry W. Massingham.

George Dawson Heath III is Associate Professor of History at Lafayette College. He has published in The Historian and in 1960-61 served as visiting lecturer at the University of Wales, Cardiff.

James William Johnson, Professor of English at the University of Rochester, is the author of Logic and Rhetoric and of The Formation of English Neo-Classical Thought. He has previously published in the J.B.S. and has written extensively for other scholarly journals. He is currently in England on an A.C.L.S. Fellowship at work on another book concerning English Neo-Classicism.

Donald N. Lammers, who is Associate Professor of History at the University of Arizona, has written a bibliographical essay, Explaining Munich: The Search for Motive in British Policy. He has also published in the Bulletin of the Institute of Historical Research.
