Crutchler. On September 30, the political science contingent paid a visit to Bordeaux, where conferences were held with the Law Faculty on topics of mutual interest.

During the past summer, Indiana University established an Institute of Training for Public Service, with Mrs. Wilma Langdon Davis, formerly of the U. S. Civil Service Commission, as director and also assistant professor of government. The Institute has an advisory board consisting of Professor Ford P. Hall and three other members chosen from outside the department of government. The functions of the Institute are to make available on a campus-wide basis information concerning careers and opportunities in the public service and to advise students with respect to the types of qualifications and training required for these careers and positions. The Institute will also serve as a placement and contact service for students interested in the public service, and will sponsor conferences of public officials and personnel heads from all levels of government. The Institute is a coördinating agency rather than an instructional unit, seeking to make available on a larger scale to all branches of the University the services previously performed only partially by the department of government.

Judge Jackson H. Ralston, formerly lecturer on international arbitration at Stanford University, died in Palo Alto on October 13. Judge Ralston practiced law in Washington, D. C., and represented the United States as counsel in the Pious Fund of the Californias against Mexico in the first dispute to be submitted to the Permanent Court of Arbitration at The Hague. Settlement of this dispute gave practical reality to the operation of the Court. In 1903, he acted as umpire of the Italian claims against Venezuela, a case which resulted in his compiling a complete record of the Venezuelan Mixed Claims Commission. Judge Ralston was an ardent single taxer, an attorney for nearly a quarter of a century for the American Federation of Labor, chairman of the Northern California Civil Liberties Union, and the author of many articles and books, including Law and Procedure of International Tribunals, International Law from Athens to Locarno, What's Wrong With Taxation?, A Quest for International Order, and International Arbitral Law and Procedure. Judge Ralston was an uncle of the late Joseph Ralston Hayden, who conferred with him frequently on matters of international relations concerning the Pacific area.
