Three books of historical interest on the Overseas Chinese community

Rickshaw Coolie: A People's History of Singapore (1880-1940)
JAMES FRANCIS WARREN

Drawing on the Coroner's Inquests and Inquiries, and through the technique of collective biography, the author chronicles the vast movement of coolies between China and the Nanyang, the dreadful poverty they encountered in Singapore, and the rhythm of what was normal in the patterns and social networks of the day-to-day life of the rickshawman.

A Social History of the Chinese in Singapore and Malaya 1800-1911

YEN CHING-HWANG

Based on records, both current and past, of the Chinese associations, this book examines how the nineteenth-century Chinese community was organized, how its members treated each other, and what problems they faced.

Tan Kah-kee: The Making of an Overseas Chinese Legend
C. F. YONG

This biography of Tan Kah-kee—the first to be written in English—describes the life and achievements of this remarkable man against the background of revolution and war in China and social and political upheaval in South-East Asia, and illustrates how Tan Kah-kee became a leading figure in modern Asian history and the legend he is today among the Chinese.

Singapore Studies:

CRITICAL SURVEYS OF THE HUMANITIES AND SOCIAL SCIENCES
BASANT K. KAPUR (ed.)

This exciting and scholarly volume is likely to appeal to anyone who has an interest in many of the dimensions of Singapore's national life and experience. In it, scholars from the Faculty of Arts and Social Sciences, National University of Singapore, have comprehensively surveyed the research that has been done on Singapore in their various disciplines. From history to politics, from economics to sociology and social work, and from English language and literature to Malay and Chinese literary writings, virtually all significant findings and works are documented. The changing geographic environment of Singapore has also been characterised, in both its physical and human dimensions. All in all, this volume contains a cornucopia of intellectual delights that will intrigue, inform and stimulate both specialists and general readers.
