

NOTES ON THE CONTRIBUTORS

ALBERT BERRY is Professor of Economics and Director of the Programme on Latin America at the Center for International Studies, University of Toronto. He has written on income distribution and labor-market issues in Latin America, with special emphasis on Colombia and other Andean countries.

LYNN STEPHEN, Associate Professor of Anthropology at Northeastern University, is currently conducting research on the movement for indigenous autonomy in Mexico. She continues to assess the impact of economic restructuring and agrarian reform on gender relations, families, and formation of ethnic identity. Her most recent book is Power from Below: Women's Grassroots Organizing in Latin America (University of Texas Press).

MARY A. CLARK is Assistant Professor of Political Science at Tulane University. She is completing a book manuscript on structural adjustment in Costa Rica.

SUSAN A. BERGER is Associate Professor of Political Science and also serves as Associate Director of the Latin American and Latino Studies Program at Fordham University.

JOHN M. TALBOT will soon receive a Ph.D. in sociology from the University of California, Berkeley. His research interests include the political economy of food and agriculture and the analysis of global commodity chains.

KENNETH M. ROBERTS is Assistant Professor of Political Science at the University of New Mexico. He is currently completing a book manuscript entitled "Deepening Democracy? The Modern Left and Social Movements in Chile and Peru."

Now an independent consultant, CLARENCE ZUVEKAS JR. retired from the U.S. Agency for International Development in August 1996. He was a scholar in residence at the School of International Service at American University for the fall semester. His publications include a textbook on economic development, a coauthored book on rural income distribution and poverty in Ecuador, and articles and essays on various aspects of Latin American development.

JOHN D. MARTZ is Distinguished Professor of Political Science at the Pennsylvania State University. Currently the editor of Studies in Comparative International Development, he served as editor of LARR from 1970 to 1975. He has written or edited some eighteen books, the most recent being The Politics of Clientelism in Colombia: Democracy and the State.

JOSEPH L. KLESNER is Associate Professor and Chair of the Department of Political Science at Kenyon College. He has published several articles on Mexican electoral politics and party-system development. His current research focuses on the electoral consequences of neoliberal economic restructuring projects in Latin America.

Since 1977, STEVE ELLNER has been teaching economic history at the Universidad de Oriente in Puerto La Cruz, Venezuela, where he is Full Professor. His book Organized Labor in Venezuela, 1958–1991 was recently updated and published in Spanish by Editorial Tropykos.

DAVID WEBSTER is Professor of Anthropology at Penn State University. A Mayanist, he has worked for many years at the Copán site. His recent overview of Maya architecture will soon be published by Dumbarton Oaks.

KATHLEEN M. BALUTANSKY is Associate Professor of English at Saint Michael's College, where she teaches courses on Caribbean and twentieth-century literature with a special focus on women writers. She has published The Novels of Alex La Guma: The Representation of a Political Conflict as well as interviews, translations, and several articles on Caribbean women writers. She and Marie-Agnès Sourieau co-edited a forthcoming anthology of essays on creolization by Caribbean writers. She is currently working on a book manuscript on English- and French-speaking Caribbean women novelists since the 1970s.

JEFFREY L. GOULD directs the Center for Latin American and Caribbean Studies at Indiana University. His most recent books on Nicaragua are El mito de Nicaragua mestiza y la resistencia indígena (published by the Editorial de la Universidad de Costa Rica in 1996) and To Die in This Way: Nicaraguan Indian Communities and the Myth of Mestizaje, 1880–1960 (forthcoming from Duke University Press).

LOWELL GUDMUNDSON, Professor and Chair of Latin American Studies at Mount Holyoke College, is currently working on social history projects in Guatemala and Costa Rica.

RICHARD N. ADAMS, Rapaport Centennial Professor of Liberal Arts Emeritus at the University of Texas at Austin, is currently with the Patzisoetz History Company. He recently published Etnias en evolución social: Estudios de Guatemala y Centroamérica (Universidad Autónoma Metropolitana, Iztapalapa, Mexico) and Un siglo de geografía étnica, Guatemala 1983–1994 (Revista USAC, Guatemala).