

Clement of Alexandria's Treatment of the Problem of Evil

W. E. Gregory Floyd

This essay discusses Clement of Alexandria's place in the history of thinking about evil. From a careful examination of the texts of the Protrepticus, Paedagogus, and Stromateis, the author demonstrates how St Clement's polemic against gnostic dualism and determinism forced him to reckon with the presence of evil in a Christian world view. £2·10

Evolution in Religion

A Study in Sri Aurobindo and Pierre Teilhard de Chardin

R. C. Zaehner

Professor Zaehner compares the thought of two major thinkers who approach their different religions from the point of view of evolution. Interpreting the Fall and the Incarnation in similar terms, he takes up Teilhard's leading idea, the 'spiritualization of matter', and applies it to the biblical narrative while developing his theme in accordance with Hindu ideas as expounded by Aurobindo. £1·90

Islamic Rationalism

The Ethics of 'Abd al-Jabbār

George F. Hourani

The Arabic works of 'Abd al-Jabbār contain a rationalistic theory of ethics that resembles modern British intuitionism. Professor Hourani has reconstructed the theory from various passages in the text. The theory is probably the most substantial piece of philosophical ethics produced between Aristotle and Aquinas. £2

The Love of God

According to Śaiva Siddhānta

A Study in the Mysticism and Theology of Śaivism

Mariasusai Dhavamony

This book shows how the values contained in an eastern religion like Hinduism have relevance to contemporary problems of religious pluralism. The author describes the type of mysticism proper to this religion, and formulates its theology of love of God. £4·20

God and Rationality

Thomas F. Torrance

This is a sequel to Professor Torrance's Theological Science (£4.20) and to his Space, Time and Incarnation (£1.25). He calls for a 'return to theological rationality': theological thinking must not be a construction of man's making but controlled and conditioned by the nature of its object, God. £2.75

The Sufi Orders in Islam

John Spencer Trimingham

Islamic mysticism has been the subject of many studies, but the orders through which the organizational aspect of the Sufi spirit was expressed have been neglected. This book, the first in this century to study the Sufi orders within the context of Islamic society, shows how they developed their relationship to the spread of mystical ideas, ritual, and practices, and their influence upon Islamic society in general. £3.25

INDIAN RELIGIONS & PHILOSOPHIES

Patterns of Indian Thought

A Students' Introduction

John B. Chethimattam

How did today's Indian religious culture come to be formed? What are the main characteristics of the religions which contributed to this culture?

From pre-Vedic times up to the present day, the Indian sub-continent has been the scene of endless encounters between differing religious traditions. Aryan, Hindu, Buddhist, Jain, Sikh, Mohammedan and Christian have all interacted to produce the situation as it actually exists, but none of them has lost its identity in the process.

John Chethimattam presents the history of these encounters and poses an important question: is it possible to reconcile the major contemporary world religions in a fruitful ecumenical dialogue? India ought to be the obvious starting-point for such a reconciliation, as it occupies the peculiarly advantageous position of being the only region of the world where all these religions have come face-to-face with each other.

The book outlines the main features of each of the religions involved, and includes sections on religion and the caste system, the development of Hindu philosophy and Vedantic metaphysics. It is an invaluable introductory handbook, both for students of Indian religion and religious thought and for the general reader.

Consciousness and Reality

An Indian Approach to Metaphysics

John B. Chethimattam

There is a radical difference between the philosophical thought-patterns of the Eastern and Western worlds. The Eastern approach to the question of God and reality is from the angle of consciousness, the Western from rational argument.

In the East, the ultimate can only be arrived at through self-awareness or consciousness. The real is what consciousness manifests. Liberation from the bondage of the finite world is the attainment of fullness of consciousness.

India is the homeland of the major Eastern religions and her traditional philosophy was greatly instrumental in formulating their religious ideas. The first part of this book examines the historical background of the various schools of Indian thought, while the second part goes into further detail and shows how elements of all these schools can be synthesised into one school of typically Indian thought. In all this, Western philosophy is considered only as a point of reference for comparison.

The major conclusion of this book is that Eastern and Western points of view are merely different ways of looking at the same thing. Meditation and active discussion are both valid means towards arriving at the truth.
