CONTRIBUTORS

Nancy Birdsall is a social science analyst with the Smithsonian Institution's Interdisciplinary Communications Program. She has specialized in population and development policy studies and has published on the relationship between female roles and fertility and on the policy relevance of fertility research.

David Chanaiwa is a Rhodesian-born African who did his A.B. degree at the University of Southern California (USC) in European History and Classics, 1961-65, and his M.A. and Ph.D. degrees in African History at the University of California, Los Angeles (UCLA), 1965-71. He was back in Rhodesia in 1968 and 1969, where he did field research on his dissertation and on the history of Rhodesia before 1900, and also taught at the University College of Rhodesia. He is currently an Associate Professor of History at the California State University, Northridge. He is a member of the African Studies Association, the Central African Historical Association, and the Academy of Political Science.

R. Hunt Davis, Jr. is an Assistant Professor of History at the University of Florida. He specializes in African education in southern Africa and is currently engaged in research on the topic of Booker T. Washington's influence on African education and politics in South Africa. His most recent publication is "John L. Dube: A South African Exponent of Booker T. Washington," Journal of African Studies (Winter, 1975/76).

O.A. Erinsho is a Lecturer in Social Psychology at the University of Ibadan, Ibadan, Nigeria. He obtained his doctorate from the University of Toronto, Canada, in 1975.

Henry C. Kenski is an Assistant Professor of Political Science at the University of Arizona. A specialist in comparative political behavior, his most recent publication is "Approaches to Foreign Policy 'Distance' Change: The Case of the United States and Latin America, 1953-70" (Sage, 1976).

Margaret C. Kenski is an Instructor of Political Science at Pima Community College. A specialist in comparative political behavior, her most recent publication is "Teaching Political Development at American Colleges and Universities: A Survey" Western Political Quarterly (September 1975).

C. Gregory Knight is an Associate Professor of Geography at the Pennsylvania State University. As a specialist in resource management and rural development, he is author of Ecology and Change: Rural Modernization in an African Community (Academic Press, 1974) and co-editor of Contemporary Africa: Geography and Change (Prentice-Hall, 1976).

John P. Renninger is a Research Associate at the United Nations Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR). He specializes in international development problems, particularly as they concern Africa.

Nancy J. Schmidt is Visiting Associate Professor of Anthropology and African Studies at the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign. Her special areas of interest are African creative writing and children's materials about Africa. Her most recent publication is Children's Books on Africa and their Authors: An Annotated Bibliography (Africana, 1975).

David V. Trotman is a doctoral candidate in the Atlantic Studies Program at the Johns Hopkins University. Apart from the study of Afro-Caribbean social institutions, his interests include the study of popular culture in the Caribbean. He is currently researching "Crime and Society in Nineteenth Century Trinidad."
