

economy. The award is focused on political scientists who study the United States, though comparative scholars who include the United States in their analyses are also eligible. Self-nominations are encouraged, but should include the name of at least one external reference. The award comes with a prize of $1000.

Nominations due: March 1, 2023

Award Committee: Kathleen Thelen (Chair), Massachusetts Institute of Technology; Daniel Galvin, Northwestern University; Jane Gingrich, Oxford University

Best Dissertation on American Political Economy

Given to a dissertation defended in the previous two calendar years (2021 or 2022) that makes an important contribution to the study of the American political economy. The award is focused on political scientists who study the United States, though comparative scholars who include the United States in their analyses are also eligible. Self-nominations are encouraged, but should include the name of at least one external reference. The award comes with a prize of $500.

Nominations due: March 1, 2023

Award Committee: Paul Pierson (Chair), University of California, Berkeley; Nicholas Carnes, Duke University; Margaret Weir, Brown University

Best Paper on American Political Economy

Given to a paper presented at the 2022 meeting of the American Political Science Association that makes an important contribution to the study of the American political economy. In this initial year, papers do not have to have been presented on panels sponsored by the Organized Section on American Political Economy. The award is focused on political scientists who study the United States, though comparative scholars who include the United States in their analyses are also eligible. Self-nominations are encouraged, but should include the name of at least one external reference. The award comes with a prize of $500.

Nominations due: March 1, 2023

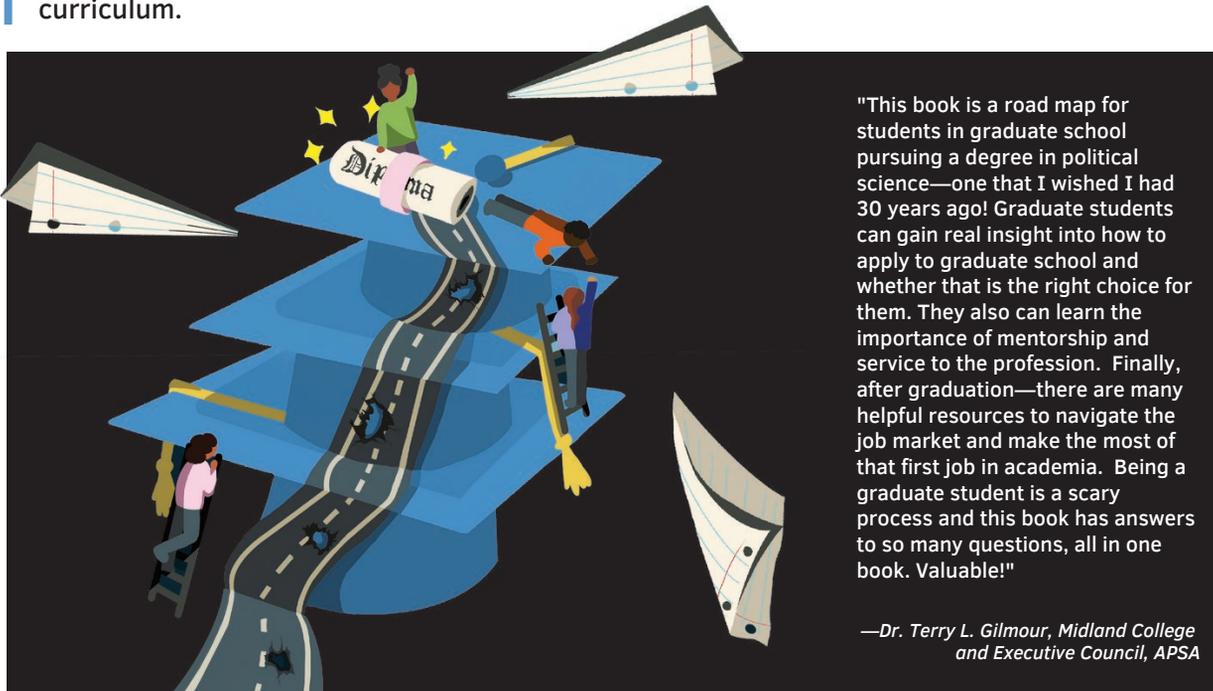

Award Committee: Jacob Grumbach (Chair); University of Washington; Isabel Perera, Cornell University; Jonathan Rodden, Stanford University ■

Introducing APSA's latest book publication:

STRATEGIES FOR NAVIGATING GRADUATE SCHOOL AND BEYOND

Earning a graduate degree in political science is the first step in pursuing an academic or alt-academic career. Beyond gaining entry to graduate school, surviving and thriving as a successful graduate student requires insights into academia and political science that most undergraduates, recent college graduates, or early career professionals simply will not know. Lack of access to this so-called "hidden curriculum" most disadvantages first generation and minoritized students, which maintains inequalities in the discipline. Strategies for Navigating Graduate School and Beyond aims to uncover this hidden curriculum.

"This book is a road map for students in graduate school pursuing a degree in political science—one that I wished I had 30 years ago! Graduate students can gain real insight into how to apply to graduate school and whether that is the right choice for them. They also can learn the importance of mentorship and service to the profession. Finally, after graduation—there are many helpful resources to navigate the job market and make the most of that first job in academia. Being a graduate student is a scary process and this book has answers to so many questions, all in one book. Valuable!"

—Dr. Terry L. Gilmour, Midland College and Executive Council, APSA

LEARN MORE AT WWW.APSANET.ORG/GRADSCHOOL