Latin American Antiquity's* new co-editors introduce themselves

Helaine Silverman (University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign) and Luis Jaime Castillo (Pontificia Universidad Católica del Perú) are pleased to introduce themselves as the new co-editors of Latin American Antiquity. We will be working with editorial assistant Kari Zabler, a graduate student in Andean archaeology at the University of Illinois. William H. Isbell (SUNY-Binghamton) will serve as the book reviews editor. The editorial transfer with outgoing co-editors Mark Aldenderfer and José Luis Lanata began on March 1. Now all manuscripts should be sent to us at laeditor@gmail.com, unless the file with figures is too large to efficiently transmit electronically, in which case we request a disk be sent to the editorial office:

We are going to be as strict as possible with a 6-week turnaround time for peer reviewers and authors revising their manuscripts.

We invite colleagues to consider creating occasional themed sections (3 or 4 articles) within the journal that would generate a closely engaged dialogue across areas (e.g., Maya, Mochica, Marajoara) around topics of shared interest, such as water management, urbanism, the built environment as text, and isostatic processes of state formation. We hope all manuscripts will consider, when feasible, the contemporary context of archaeological practice, including problems of heritage and the representation of identity. We welcome critiques of museum exhibitions. Rather than publishing obituaries we want to be proactive and would like to commission interviews of senior archaeologists working in various Latin American countries that will consider the state-of-the-art nationally, thematically, and theoretically. We welcome inquiries from colleagues who wish to propose an interviewee and conduct the interview (by any means suitable). We especially hope to receive manuscripts concerning parts of Latin America that have been less visible in the journal. Finally, there will be no distinction made between "articles" and "reports."

We will be delighted to receive inquiries on any of the above, or to hear any ideas colleagues might wish to propose.
