

The Evolution of Education

The American College and the Culture of Aspiration, 1915-1940

By DAVID O. LEVINE. "In a narrative that is intelligently presented, well organized, and swarming with information on a subject that deserves the attention given to it, the author skillfully describes how conservatives mouthed the platitudes of a liberal, democratic ethos of opportunity—the American Dream—and then acted effectively to delimit and structure the consequences."—Burton J. Bledstein, History of Education Quarterly.

Is higher education a right or a privilege? Who should go to college, and what should they study there? These questions were hotly debated between the world wars, when an unprecedented boom in college enrollments forced Americans to weigh their belief in the importance of educational opportunity and their desire to preserve the existing social structure. Levine offers the first in-depth history of higher education during this era. $9.95 paper

Women at Cornell The Myth of Equal Education

By CHARLOTTE WILLIAMS CONABLE. A pioneer in coeducation, Cornell University was the first major institution in the East to admit women and initially offered similar opportunities for men and women. Policies soon changed, however, as a result of economic and social pressures, and women were confined to a minority of the student body. Conable documents how this development led to a pattern of limited opportunity for women. She takes note of gains for women since the 1960s and defines the further changes that must take place if women and men are to be offered a truly equal higher education. $8.95 paper

The Making of an American High School

The Credentials Market and the Central High School of Philadelphia, 1838-1939

David F. Labaree

An analytical study of the origins and development of Central High School, the first high school in Philadelphia and a model for secondary schools elsewhere. Using Central as a case study, David F. Labaree argues that the American public high school is a product of a continuing struggle between democratic political ideals and capitalist elitism and that this struggle helps explain both the twists and turns of its historical development and its current image as an institution in crisis. $30.00

"The topic concerns more than nineteenth century French history. It concerns the assumptions of secularity in contemporary Western culture. The topic is fundamental to any field of study that deals with values."

— Phillip L. Smith

The current controversy over the teaching of values and the role of religion in our public schools is an important and much discussed topic. Stock-Morton's work represents not only a valuable historical investigation, but a useful resource for the review and consideration of our present-day dilemma. France is the only country that has attempted to teach an official secular morality and Stock-Morton's is the first study to describe and trace the development of that effort.

The history of morale laïque is significant at a time when our own country is rife with controversy over the role of religion and teaching of values in the schools. Stock-Morton's thoughtful study is an important contribution to the literature for those concerned with these significant issues.

The Social History of American Education

Edited by

B. Edward McClellan and William J. Reese

For over twenty-five years, the History of Education Quarterly has served as the meeting ground for a generation of the leading experts in educational and social history. For the convenience of scholars and students alike, Edward McClellan and William Reese bring together the major ideas of its most prominent contributors. Bridging the span of American educational history from the colonial era to the present, these essays offer extensive coverage of such topics as women's education, the education of minority groups, and the social dimensions of educational reform.

Contributors: David F. Allmendinger, Jr., James D. Anderson, Jurgen Herbst, N. Ray Hiner, Michael B. Katz, Marvin Lazerson, Katherine McDaniel Moore, Michael R. Olneck, David N. Plank, Paul E. Peterson, Mary Aicken Rothschild, John L. Rury, Guadalupe San Miguel, Jr., Anne Firor Scott, Ronald Story, Marcia G. Synnott, Jon Teaford, Selwyn Troen, and David B. Tyack.

"These essays represent some of the best and most significant contributions to the reconceptualized field of history of education that have been published in recent years." — Jennings L. Wagoner, past president of the History of Education Society and co-editor of The Changing Politics of Education. $34.95; paper, $11.95.
