CORRECTIONS

Correction from the October 2011 issue, 76:4, by Arakawa et al:

The information in Figure 6 (page 784) should include “Obsidian sources of the Jemez Mountains and northern Rio Grande (adapted from Steffen and LeTourneau [2007]; original graphic of secondary sources is from work by LeTourneau [2000], based in part on research by Baugh and Nelson [1987]; Church et al. [1996]; and Church [2000], among others).

In addition, my interpretations of the Valles Rhyolite is based on the analyses performed by LeTourneau (2000; see also LeTourneau et al. 1998), LeTourneau and Steffen (2002), LeTourneau and Shackley (2009).

Correction from the January 2012 issue, 77:1, by Taylor and Creel:

In our article, “Biological Relationships between Foragers and Farmers of South-central North America: Non-metric Dental Traits” (American Antiquity, Vol.77, No. 1, p. 103), we stated that “No remains were examined without prior approval of the project from the appropriate tribal officials or state/federal governmental agency.” We wish to clarify that the collections that are curated at Southern Methodist University, at the University of Texas at El Paso, and at New Mexico State University were not included in our study because we did not have approval from the relevant tribal officials of the culturally affiliated Native American tribe(s) for research on these particular collections. The position of the tribal officials does not reflect the position of any of these three curating institutions regarding the research. We would like to note again our appreciation of the cooperation of so many tribes, universities, and museums in this effort.
