The Church of Ireland
Ecclesiastical Reform and Revolution
1800–1885

by Donald Harman Akenson

Adroitly combining the best aspects of traditional narrative history with techniques familiar to the most sophisticated of social sciences, Mr. Akenson has written a thoroughly engaging, analytical study of a total ecclesiastical system in the process of change. Set against the backdrop of contemporary public issues in Ireland and England, the book considers those factors that accounted for reform and distinguishes them from those that produced a revolution in church affairs. $15.00

Political Roles in a New State
Tanzania's First Decade

by Raymond F. Hopkins

The Tanzanian experiment with its essentially agricultural approach to development, the continuing effort by its leadership to make political parties a vital force in domestic politics, and its attempts to deal with the problems of tribalism continues to merit serious investigation. In this study, based on field work in Tanzania that included interviews with 109 administrators and legislators, Mr. Hopkins examines Tanzania's political system as reflected in the character of role expectations among the elite. He finds a closed system of politics developing in Tanzania that is based on consensual role expectations, and suggests that this could be a way to avoid the conflicts and violence common to many developing countries.

Their Solitary Way
The Puritan Social Ethic in the First Century of Settlement in New England

by Stephen Foster

Puritanism has received much of the blame for the evils of twentieth-century America. But the Puritan immigrants came to New England principally to participate in a viable form of government and had no thought of the future impact of their social ethics. Using rich and varied sources, Mr. Foster perceptively examines the rules of behavior the settlers thought they should follow as members of a civil community, and shows that—despite its many ambiguities and paradoxes—Puritanism in New England was a coherent and truly new way of life.

Unions, Parties, and Political Development
A Study of Mineworkers in Zambia

by Robert H. Bates

Like most new nations, Zambia aspires to rapid economic development. Because the economy is based largely on copper production, regulation and control of the copper miners represents a crucial political task for Zambia's ambitious elite. In this study Robert Bates analyzes the attempt of the government to use the dominant political party and the Mineworkers' Union to enforce a relatively strict labor code. Since governments throughout Africa striving for economic maturity are struggling with similar problems, Bates' findings have a relevance beyond Zambia. "This study presents the best analysis that I have seen of relations between a trade union and a political party in a new African state."—Richard L. Sklar. $12.50

Social Control in Slave Plantation Societies

A Comparison of St. Domingue and Cuba

Gwendolyn Midlo Hall

In what has been called the best comparative study of two slave plantation societies, Gwendolyn Hall goes beyond the world of appearances to view the slave populations as active forces in society. Her primary focus is on the transition from pre-plantation to plantation society, and her conclusions shatter longstanding misconceptions about slave systems and the origins of racism in the Americas. $8.00

The Ormée of Bordeaux

A Revolution during the Fronde

Sal Alexander Westrich

In 1652 the Ormée—a movement of artisans, petty officials, and small merchants—seized power from the Parlement, declared war on the royal government, and proceeded to rule Bordeaux for over a year. In the first study of social stratification during the Fronde, Sal Westrich describes how the Ormée transformed political life in Bordeaux and how its own conflicting goals ironically caused its failure. PERGAMON

Change and Uncertainty in a Peasant Economy

THE MAYA CORN FARMERS OF ZINACANTAN. Frank Cancian. This study stresses the influence of uncertainty on decisions made by farmers in response to new economic opportunities provided by government improvement programs. The author also develops and tests a theory relating behavior under uncertainty to rank in an economic stratification system. Illustrated. $8.50

Landlord and Peasant in Colonial Oaxaca

William B. Taylor. The hacienda system of northern Mexico has been considered an accurate model of Spanish settlement and landholding for all of colonial Mexico. This study demonstrates that conditions in the Valley of Oaxaca were markedly different, and that many accepted generalizations about land tenure in the colonial era will have to be modified or discarded. April. About $11.50

NOTES FOR CONTRIBUTORS

Contributions may be descriptive, analytical or theoretical. Any article not in itself comparative may be accepted if it lends itself to comment that will place it in comparative perspective. Correspondence with the editors prior to the submission of articles will help to enable them to obtain such comment or a companion study. Emphasis in comparative studies may be either on similarities or, if these are significant enough and call for some recasting of generalisations, on differences. All contributions and editorial correspondence should be sent to the Editors, Comparative Studies in Society and History, Department of History, University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Michigan 48104.

Two copies of each contribution, preferably accompanied by a stamped, addressed envelope, should be submitted. Both text and footnotes should be clearly typed with double spacing and wide margins; footnotes should appear on separate pages at the end of the article. Illustrations may be included by arrangement with the editors.

Contributors will receive 50 offprints bound in the journal covers. Any additional offprints must be ordered on receipt of the first proof.
