PREFATORY NOTE

I am deeply indebted to the Earl of Kimberley for the privilege of publishing this Journal, which I found among the private papers at Kimberley House. My visit in 1948 was arranged by the late Lt. Col. G. E. G. Malet, then Registrar of the National Register of Archives, and aided by a grant from the Central Research Fund of the University of London. Dr. R. B. McDowell, of Trinity College, Dublin, helped me to track down the elusive Tighe Hamilton, and Miss Agatha Ramm, of Somerville College, guided me to the relevant documents on the proposed supplemental article to the Treaty of Washington. Mr. A. B. Acheson, of the Historical Section of the Cabinet Office, dealt promptly with my request for permission to see a draft by Gladstone on this subject. The Archivist of the National Archives at Washington kindly sent me copies of the two British Notes of 10 May 1872 after Professor Mildred Campbell, of Vassar College, had made the necessary arrangement on my behalf. Mr. H. A. C. Sturgess, of the Middle Temple Library, disposed of a misleading statement that a Privy Councillorship was at one time a bar to legal practice. Miss Freda Wolfson permitted me to use her doctoral thesis on 'British Relations with the Gold Coast, 1843-1880' for an account of the Ashanti War of 1873-4. To all these I am most grateful. I should also like to thank the Keeper of Western Manuscripts at the Bodleian Library for permission to consult the Clarendon papers, the assistant librarians of the Institute of Historical Research, Miss J. C. Lancaster and Mr. A. M. C. Field, for their co-operation, and Miss E. Curzon, secretary of the History Department at Birkbeck College, who gave me invaluable help by her intelligent typing of my script.
