If you think cultural affairs count, count to $V

For the first time America is counting heavily on public cultural agencies. The National Foundation on the Arts and the Humanities is spending over $30 million this year. The New York State Council on the Arts has a $20 million budget. Two-thirds of the 50 state arts councils have over $100,000 from state funds alone. Some 600 municipal and community cultural councils will direct millions more to orchestras, museums, and art centers throughout the United States. All this in addition to the cultural activities of foundations, business, and private philanthropy.

What it all adds up to is a new, increasingly decentralized, direction of the American cultural enterprise. As the bill for the best things in life mounts higher and the debate over cultural priorities waxes hotter, cultural policy becomes increasingly a matter of public concern. And there's one magazine designed specifically to deal with the priorities and conditions that affect culture in America.

Cultural Affairs is a quarterly magazine of public policy. It explores the social, economic, and political aspects of our artistic apparatus. It looks at art in the museums and in the streets. It lends an ear to the plight of the symphony and to the drumbeat of change. For example: Cultural Affairs 11 goes into the American schoolroom — the arts in general education, the artist as teacher (and vice-versa), nonverbal communication as a teaching tool, and guerilla theater as lesson plan. Cultural Affairs 12 considers the state of American writing — the large contribution of the small press, the effect of the reviews, the new poets, writing in college, the experience of the unpublished black author. Each issue also contains regular reports, facts, and figures on the cultural activities of government, foundations, business, and arts councils throughout the country.

CULTURAL AFFAIRS

Dear Cultural Affairs:

Add me. I understand that $5.00 is the rate for one year, $9.00 for two. I (am, am not) an arts organization, so I (do, don't) get a 25% discount. I'll add 50 cents a year for foreign postage, including Canada.
