

Man's New Home

Herman F. Roissig. United Church Press. 191 pp. $2.50.

Dr. Roissig describes a "Christian Approach to Changing World Problems"—the book's subtitle—as one in which "the emphasis is on man, on the living person." Modern war, the nature of the Communist challenge and foreign aid are among the problems discussed within this framework.

With Forks and Hope: An African Notebook

Elsbeth Huxley. Morrow. 398 pp. $5.95.

Visits to Tanganyika, Uganda and Zanzibar in 1963 yielded Mrs. Huxley's latest volume of reports on East Africa. Among those she questioned about modern Africa were government leaders, European and Asian settlers and native Africans.

The Problem of Population

Donald N. Barrett, ed. Notre Dame. 161 pp. $1.95.

A conference held at Notre Dame last year and attended by over 30 lay and clerical Catholic scholars, was concerned with clarifying the position of the Church on the issues of birth control and increasing population. Included here are the papers which were delivered, the text of an interview with Fr. Bernard Haring, and an "integrated outline" of the major ideas presented during the three-day meeting.

Foreign Aid and Foreign Policy

Edward S. Mason. Harper & Row. 118 pp. $1.65.

The problem of sharing foreign aid burdens with others and the difficulties encountered in one of America's first "regional enterprises," the Alliance for Progress, are among the topics discussed in this book, originally presented as the Elihu Root Lectures at the Council on Foreign Relations.

The Formation of Malaysia

Willard A. Hanna. American Universities Field Staff. 248 pp. $6.50.

From February 1962 to the eve of the establishment of the new Federation of Malaysia last fall, Mr. Hanna's reports for the AUFS chronicled the progress of an example of "peaceful self-determination" taking place in Southeast Asia. An introduction and postscript bring developments in the area up-to-date.

Europe Ascendant

George Liska. Johns Hopkins. 182 pp. $4.50.

Now, as in comparable periods of history, says the author, "the regeneration in Europe of the idea of unity has coincided with the return to Europe of another idea, that of independence." Dr. Liska explores the causes, effects and uses this resurgent combination can have for the European continent and its place in the world.
