The Origins of Agriculture in the Lowland Neotropics

Dolores Piperno

Smithsonian Tropical Research Institute, Balboa, Panama

Deborah M. Pearsall

University of Missouri, Columbia

Contains color images!

"The authors are active, well-known investigators with decades-long commitment to tropical forest agriculture and archaeology in Latin America. Their book is essential reading for everyone concerned with agricultural origins and the Neotropics.

—PATTY JO WATSON, Edward Mallinckrodt Distinguished University Professor of Anthropology
Washington University, St. Louis, Missouri

"Our understanding of the origins of agriculture in the tropical lowlands has traditionally been limited by narrow theoretical and methodological approaches. This provocative book presents an up-to-date review of the direct and indirect evidence for early cultigens, a history of ideas, and the intense contemporary debates on the origins and development of agriculture in the tropical regions of the Americas. Piperno and Pearsall propose a bold theoretical perspective on the priority and importance of early crop domestication by the inhabitants of the neotropics."

—CLARK L. ERICKSON, University of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia

"Dolores Piperno and Deborah Pearsall have produced the first comprehensive treatment of agricultural origins in the American tropical lowlands since Carl Sauer's landmark publications in the early 1950's. This book will be required reading for all serious students of the development of agriculture and tropical human ecology. It highlights the important role which humans occupying the American tropics played in the domestication and dispersal of important crops and helps redress the dearth of literature available on that subject."

—J. SCOTT RAYMOND, University of Calgary, Alberta, Canada

Key Features

- Argues that tropical forest food production emerged at approximately the same time as that in the Near East and is earlier than currently demonstrated in highland Mexico and Peru
- Contends that the lowland tropics witnessed climatic and vegetational changes between 11,000 BP and 10,000 BP, no less profound than those experienced at higher latitudes
- Appeals to anyone concerned with Latin American prehistory
- Covers the development of slash and burn (or swidden) cultivation
- Focuses on low and lower mid-elevations
