Ohio State Hosts Faculty Workshop

The Political Science Department at Ohio State University organized a workshop on Data Analysis for College Faculty. The project was supported by a grant from the National Science Foundation. The APSA has been working with Ohio State University to distribute information about the program. Aage R. Clausen directed the workshop with presentations and research advice offered by

Ohio State faculty members including: Herbert B. Asher, Lawrence Baum, Paul Allen Beck, Gregory A. Caldeira, Pradeep Chhibber, Margaret Hermann, Anthony Mughan, Samuel C. Patterson, Brian M. Pollins, Elliott E. Slotnick, Donald A. Sylvan, and Herbert F. Weisberg. Karen Huxtable-Jester, graduate research associate at Ohio State University, served as the workshop coordinator.

The workshop sessions were devoted to facilitating faculty research and undergraduate teaching. There were hands-on lessons about micro-computers for teaching data analysis, survey research as an instructional tool; review and use of large data sets for teaching many fields of political science, including Comparative Politics, Mass Behavior, International Relations, Judicial Politics, Legislative Voting Behavior, Presidential Elections and Subpresidential Elections, and personal assistance on the participants' own research projects and teaching needs. Participants presented research projects and exchanged suggestions and plans for undergraduate courses in methodology and data analysis. A story about the workshops' curriculum and the participants' experiences, accompanied by a bibliography for use by other faculty who teach data analysis will appear in a 1993 issue of PS: Political Science & Politics.

Twenty-eight political science faculty attended the workshop. The participants, pictured in the accompanying photograph, included: Mike Avey, Northern Kentucky University; Harry Basehart, Salisbury State University; Roland Blasini, Sheridan College; David Bowers, University of Southern Mississippi; Thomas Brogan, Albright College; Rodney Christy, Saint Michael's College; Roy Dawes, University of Southwestern Louisiana; Pamela Edwards, Wittenberg University; Sally M.
