

NOTES ON THE CONTRIBUTORS

MARIEL AGUILAR-STØEN is a senior researcher at the Centre for Development and the Environment, University of Oslo. Her current research interest focuses on international migration and land-use change in Mexico and Guatemala.

KENNETH J. ANDRIEN is Humanities Distinguished Professor in History at Ohio State University. He received his B.A. at Trinity College and his M.A. and Ph.D. degrees at Duke University. He has written Crisis and Decline: The Viceroyalty of Peru in the Seventeenth Century (1985), The Kingdom of Quito, 1690–1830: The State and Regional Development (1995), and Andean Worlds: Indigenous History, Culture, and Consciousness under Spanish Rule, 1532–1825 (2001), and has edited The Human Tradition in Colonial Latin America (2003). He has also coedited (with Rolena Adorno) Transatlantic Encounters: Europeans and Andeans in the Sixteenth Century (1991) and (with Lyman L. Johnson) The Political Economy of Spanish America in the Age of Revolution, 1750–1850 (1994).

ARILD ANGELSEN is professor of economics at the Norwegian University of Life Sciences (UMB) and a senior associate of the Center for International Forestry Research (CIFOR), Indonesia. He has done extensive research on causes of tropical deforestation and the interaction with poverty, tenure, and government policies. His more recent work is on how reducing deforestation and forest degradation (REDD) can be included in a global climate regime, as well as national strategies and policies to reduce greenhouse-gas emissions.

ROGER ATWOOD was a visiting researcher at the Center for Latin American Studies at Georgetown University from 2005 to 2007 and later communications director at the Washington Office on Latin America. His articles have appeared in SAIS Review and Georgetown Journal of International Affairs, as well as in numerous popular publications in North America, Europe, and Latin America. He is currently an independent scholar and writer living in London.

JAVIER AUYERO is Joe R. and Teresa Lozano Long Professor of Latin American Sociology at the University of Texas-Austin. He is the author of Poor People's Politics (Duke University Press, 2000), Contentious Lives (Duke University Press, 2003), Routine Politics and Collective Violence in Argentina (Cambridge University Press, 2007), and (with Débora Swistun) Flammable: Environmental Suffering in an Argentine Shantytown (Oxford University Press, 2009).

SCOTT H. BECK is professor of sociology at East Tennessee State University. Together with Kenneth J. Mijeski, he has been investigating the indigenous movement and racial politics in Ecuador since 1995. Mijeski and Beck have published articles in various journals, including Latin Americanist, Latin American and Caribbean Ethnic Studies, and Latin American Research

Latin American Research Review, Vol. 46, No. 1. © 2011 by the Latin American Studies Association.

Review. Their forthcoming book (from Ohio University Press) is New Age, Old Politics: Pachakutik and the Rise and Decline of the Ecuadorian Indigenous Movement.

JACQUELINE BEHREND is assistant professor and researcher at the Escuela de Política y Gobierno, Universidad Nacional de San Martín, in Argentina, and a Consejo Nacional de Investigaciones Científicas y Técnicas post-doctoral fellow. She received her D.Phil. in politics from the University of Oxford in early 2008. She has written on subnational politics and democratization in Argentina, and her current research focuses on comparative subnational democratization. At present, she is coordinating a broader research project with Laurence Whitehead—"Sub-national Democratization: Latin America, the United States, Russia and India in Comparative Perspective"—with funding from a Mellon–Latin American Studies Association Grant.

SIMONE BOHN is assistant professor of political science at York University, in Toronto, Canada. Her interests include the study of political parties, electoral behavior, and political culture in the recently democratized countries of Latin America. Her work has appeared in several peer-reviewed journals, such as Government and Opposition, Dados, Brazilian Political Science Review, Revista de Sociologia e Política, and Revista Opinião Pública. She is currently finalizing a book manuscript on the left turn in Latin America.

ISAAC CARO is a sociologist at the Catholic University of Chile. He received his M.A. from Alberto Hurtado University and his Ph.D. in American studies from Universidad de Santiago de Chile. He has been a researcher at the Latin American Faculty of Social Sciences (FLACSO-Chile) and at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem. Among his publications are Fundamentalismos islámicos: Guerra contra Occidente y América Latina (2002), Extremismos de derecha y movimientos neonazis (2007), and Islam y Judaísmo latinoamericano contemporáneo (2010).

JACK A. DRAPER III is assistant professor of Portuguese at the University of Missouri–Columbia. His book manuscript, currently under revision for publication, is titled Forró and Redemptive Regionalism from the Brazilian Northeast: Popular Music in a Culture of Migration. This work explores the history of a popular musical genre in Brazil. Through lyrical and regional cultural analysis, it draws larger conclusions about the significance of regional popular culture in rethinking Brazilian national identity and developing a regionalist identity both in the Northeast and in the diaspora of Northeasterners elsewhere in the country. His recent scholarship also includes "Renovation and Conservation in Brazilian Literature and Music" in Journal of Latin American Cultural Studies (2008).

CHRISTINA WAGNER FAEGRI is a Ph.D. candidate in the Politics and International Relations Program at the University of Southern California. She is currently writing her dissertation on the politics of taxation in the emerging markets of Latin America.

KENNETH J. MIJESKI is professor emeritus in the Department of Political Science, International Affairs, and Public Administration at East Tennessee State University. Mijeski and Scott Beck have published articles in various journals, including Latin Americanist, Latin American and Caribbean Ethnic Studies, and Latin American Research Review. Their forthcoming book (from Ohio University Press) is New Age, Old Politics: Pachakutik and the Rise and Decline of the Ecuadorian Indigenous Movement.

STEIN R. MOE is professor of tropical ecology at the Norwegian University of Life Sciences (UMB) with particular interests in plant animal interactions and in the effects of land use on biodiversity. He has been involved in research projects in several African, Asian, and Latin American countries.

JOAN M. NELSON is a senior scholar at the Woodrow Wilson Center of the Smithsonian Institution and scholar-in-residence at the School of International Service, American University. Her primary research interest is the politics of economic and social service reforms, and interactions between market-oriented reforms and democratization in middle- and low-income countries. Nelson received her doctorate from Harvard in 1960. She has consulted for the U.S. Agency for International Development, the World Bank, the Inter-American Development Bank, and the International Monetary Fund, and she has taught at Massachusetts Institute of Technology, the Johns Hopkins School of Advanced International Studies, and the Woodrow Wilson School at Princeton University.

MICOL SEIGEL received her Ph.D. from New York University in American studies. She is assistant professor in the department of African American and African Diaspora Studies and the program in American studies at Indiana University, Bloomington. Her work on cultural politics, transnational method, state discipline and surveillance, and race in the Americas, particularly in the United States and Brazil, can be found in Hispanic American Historical Review, Radical History Review, Journal of Latin American Cultural Studies, Revista Brasileira de História, and Black Music Research Journal, and in her book Uneven Encounters: Making Race and Nation in Brazil and the United States (Duke University Press, 2009).

DEBORAH SICK is associate professor of anthropology and international development and globalization at the University of Ottawa, where she teaches and conducts research on rural development, export commodities, farming households, common property resource management, and social economy in Latin America. Her publications include Coffee, Farming Families, and Alternative Trade in Costa Rica: New Markets, Same Old Problems? (2008), Farmers of the Golden Bean: Costa Rican Households, Global Coffee and Fair Trade (2008), The Social Contexts and Consequences of Institutional Change in Common-Pool Resource Management (2008), and Coping with Crisis: Costa Rican Households and the International Coffee Market (1997).

MEAGAN M. STARK is currently a doctoral student in political science and McNair Fellow at Syracuse University, where she is pursuing her interest in international relations and conflict studies.

PETER LEIGH TAYLOR is associate professor of sociology at Colorado State University. Taylor engages in research and applied work related to community-based forestry and conservation organizations in Mexico and Central America. His recent work has appeared in Journal of Rural Studies, World Development and Society, and Natural Resources. Taylor is co-coordinator of the Environmental Governance Working Group at Colorado State University.

ANTONIO TORRES-RUIZ received his Ph.D. in political science from the University of Toronto. He recently joined the Department of Equity Studies at York University, where he teaches human rights and global political economy, and is a lecturer in the Latin American Studies Program at the University of Toronto. He did his undergraduate studies at El Colegio de México and the Instituto Tecnológico Autónomo de México (ITAM). He was an associate researcher at the Centro de Investigación y Docencia Económicas (Mexico City, 1995–1998) and taught economics at ITAM (1994–1996). His publications include reviews and articles for International Journal (Canada), História, Ciências, Saude (Brazil), and Working Papers Series, CIDE (Mexico), as well as collaborations in edited volumes on North American governance.

CAROL WISE is associate professor of international relations in the School of International Relations at the University of Southern California. Wise has written widely on issues pertaining to Latin American political economy, including four edited collections that analyze exchange rate regimes, regional integration, and political responses to market reform in the region. In 2003, she published Reinventing the State: Economic Strategy and Institutional Change in Peru (University of Michigan Press), and she is currently completing a book on the decline of U.S. influence in Latin America and the concomitant rise of China as a trade and investment partner in the region.