

Explanation and Human Action

A. R. LOUCH

Human action is to be explained by seeing that an action is undertaken to accomplish a task or achieve a goal. Such explanation is found in the particular case, and not by reference to general theories. Consequently the behavioural scientist's hopes for a general theory of human action are misconceived.

SPACE, TIME, AND DEITY

With a new Foreword by Dorothy Emmet

This reissue of the Gifford Lectures given at Glasgow in 1916–1918 will be very welcome to all students of philosophy, since on any count it ranks among the great ventures in systematic metaphysics.

What I Believe

Questions about life and its purposes answered by some of the liveliest minds of today including Lord Boothby, A. J. Ayer, Arthur Calder-Marshall, Daphne du Maurier, Jacquetta Hawkes, Malcolm Muggeridge, J. B. Priestley, Norman St. John-Stevas, Barbara Wootton, John Wren-Lewis. A growing revelation of how men and women find meaning in life. 25s.

Ethics and Education

R. S. PETERS

If ever there was a time when fundamental work was required in the philosophy of education, it is the present. This book attempts to provide a proper ethical foundation for education in a democratic society.

'Never before has it been so essential to get our values about the meaning and the methods of education right. For this reason a new book on ethics and education, published today is more than welcome—it is vital . . . eminently readable.' Birmingham Post 40s.

Philosophical Essays

BERTRAND RUSSELL

Apart from two essays which have since been reprinted in Mysticism and Logic, these essays stand exactly as originally published in 1910. The author has made no attempt to modify them to accord with changes in his opinions which have developed in the interval. The collection includes 'The Elements of Ethics', 'Pragmatism', 'The Monistic Theory of Truth', 'James' Conception of Truth', and 'On the Nature of Truth and Falsehood'. 30s

Lectures On Philosophy

Edited by CASMIR LEWY

G. E. Moore lectured at Cambridge every year from 1911 until his retirement in 1939. These lectures were often attended by philosophers from different parts of the world, and they were one of the chief means by which he extended his influence on the philosophical thought of his time. They discuss problems in epistemology, in philosophical logic and in the methodology of philosophy. They contain ideas which Moore did not publish elsewhere, and they should be of unusual interest to students of analytic philosophy. Muirhead Library of Philosophy 35s

ADAM
FERGUSON

an Essay on the History of Civil Society
1767

by Adam Ferguson, with an introduction by Duncan Forbes

Adam Ferguson was a leading figure of the 18th-century Scottish Enlightenment and held in high respect by later thinkers such as Mill, Schiller and Marx. This is the first English edition since 1814 of his classic of social and political thought. A perceptive introduction has been provided by Duncan Forbes of Clare College, Cambridge.

The Economist 'one of the early classics of sociology, elegantly printed and produced'. 42s.

MAN, THE UNIVERSE AND MIND

An Essay in Empirical Analysis

by P. A. Moritz

Introduces a dispassionate objective analytic procedure, independent of plausibilities, sympathies, trends or fashions . . . by which the stock models in the Perception, Object and World theory issues are tested, without fear or favour, against an impressive range of new scientific data.

Concerned with Cosmic actualities, rather than with linguistic expressions of belief or attitude.
