

New Studies in the Philosophy of Religion

General Editor: W. D. Hudson

This series covers the main philosophic problems connected with religious belief from the points of view of contemporary analytical philosophy. Although some of the authors are religious believers, the aim of this series is not primarily polemical or apologetic, but explanatory.

'These books will provide the student, as well as the professional philosopher with excellent introductions to the topics under consideration.'—Times Literary Supplement

Reason and Reality

Royal Institute of Philosophy Lectures, Volume 5, 1970-1971

The revolution in philosophy in this century is marked by concern with language. What happens when those who lived for and with this revolution look back to what went before? To answer this question contemporary philosophers have provided original lectures on central themes in the philosophy of the Continental Rationalists, British Empiricists, and Kant and the post-Kantians.

A Critique of Max Weber's Philosophy of Social Science

W. G. RUNCIMAN

This essay is written in the belief that it is possible to correct mistakes in Max Weber's philosophy of social sciences. Mr Runciman argues that Weber was wrong on three issues: the distance between theoretical presuppositions and implicit value judgements, the manner in which 'ideographic' explanations may be subsumed under causal laws, and the relation of explanation to description. . . . shows his work at its best . . . he is lucid, swift and clear, yet weighty with learning and meaning.'

Emotion and Object

J. R. S. WILSON

An important and original study concerned with the sense in which emotions can be said to have objects, their relation to these objects and the implications of this relation for the understanding of human action and behaviour. The enquiry is set against a broad background of the history of philosophy of mind and connected with current controversies about behaviourism, causality and machine intelligence.

Applications of Moral Philosophy

R. M. Hare

The essays here collected, both previously published and newly written, seek to clarify a wide range of moral problems from peace and war to architecture and civil planning. They are united by their success in illustrating how an understanding of words can help untie real knots.

Essays on the Moral Concepts

R. M. Hare

The last twenty years have seen a marked advance in our understanding of the moral concepts, and to this the work of Professor Hare has contributed greatly. This volume collects his main polemical writings in this field, which are distinguished by clear, close reasoning.

The Morality of Politics

Edited by BHIKHU PAREKH & R. N. BERKI

These essays confront 'political reality' with morality. The contributors discuss and analyse the basic moral problems of political life and in the process identify and clarify the problems which are all too often evaded or ignored. Contributors include W. H. Walsh, A. J. Milne, R. S. Downie, Geoffrey Goodwin, Geraint Parry, H. B. Acton & K. R. Minogue.

Paperback £1.60; hardback £3.00

Experimentation with Human Subjects

Edited by PAUL A. FREUND

A survey of the field of issues involved in this difficult area by leading figures in a wide range of disciplines—law, philosophy, medicine, anthropology, sociology.

£4.50

The Pluralist and Possibilist Aspects of the Scientific Enterprise

ARNE NAESS

The dominant picture of science as more or less certain knowledge is here contrasted with the reality of research dynamics—an unending project of daring hypotheses, never completely verified or falsified. The author stresses the lack of autonomy of science in relation to the great syntheses—general philosophical systems and outlooks—but without robbing it of its basically rational character, he does reveal an enlargement of our concept of reality.

Human Understanding

Volume 1

STEPHEN TOULMIN

The three volumes of Human Understanding will discuss the collective use and evolution of concepts, the development and use of conceptual capacities by individuals, and the standards for judging the intellectual claims of concepts. In this first volume Stephen Toulmin attacks the problems of conceptual change where Frege, Collingwood, and Kuhn leave off. £4.75

A Theory of Justice

JOHN RAWLS

'I think that this book is the most substantial and interesting contribution to moral philosophy since the war The substance of a critical and liberal political philosophy is here argued with an assurance and breadth of mind that puts the book in the tradition of Adam Smith and Sidgwick.'—Stuart Hampshire in the New York Review of Books. 12 text figures £5

Criticism and Personal Taste

R. PEACOCK

This study is addressed to anyone deeply exercised by the problem of justifying personal taste. The author examines the relation between taste and the different functions of literature for the individual, and draws a distinction between a restricted number of primary criteria and the enormous range of qualities in different literary works. £2.25

The Origins of Kant's Arguments in the Antinomies

SADIK J. AL-AZM

Dr Al-Azm shows that knowledge of the origins of Kant's arguments is a valuable aid in understanding his meaning, and argues that the views defended in the four theses are substantially those of Samuel Clarke (and the Newtonians), while the views defended in the antitheses are essentially those adopted by Leibniz in his controversy with the Newtonians. £2.75

Hegel's Development

Towards the Sunlight 1770-1801

H. S. HARRIS

This book is an intellectual biography of Hegel from the Gymnasium years until his first academic post at Jena. His development in this period is viewed as the organic development of his vocation as a Volkserzieher. Hegel gradually discovers philosophy and the necessity of personal commitment as a philosopher. £5
