CHILDBEARING AND FARM PRODUCTIVITY
IN THE ANTEBELLUM NORTH

Lee A. Craig

"A lucid and insightful discussion of the historiography of fertility differences. Craig uses an extremely creative—yet simple and direct—approach to estimate the value of children in mid-nineteenth-century agriculture. His estimates challenge the conventional wisdom that families closer to the frontier had more children because of the increased opportunities for child labor. Then, as now, children were not net economic assets, valued for their contribution to family income, but rather, we would hope, were sources of pride, love, and affection."—Jeremy Atack, University of Illinois, Urbana-Champaign

Defending Community in the Black Patch, 1890–1915

Christopher Waldrep

“A well-researched work of creative scholarship. . . . Waldrep’s book is an important contribution to our understanding of economic relationships, rural life, and violence in the late nineteenth- and early twentieth-century South.”

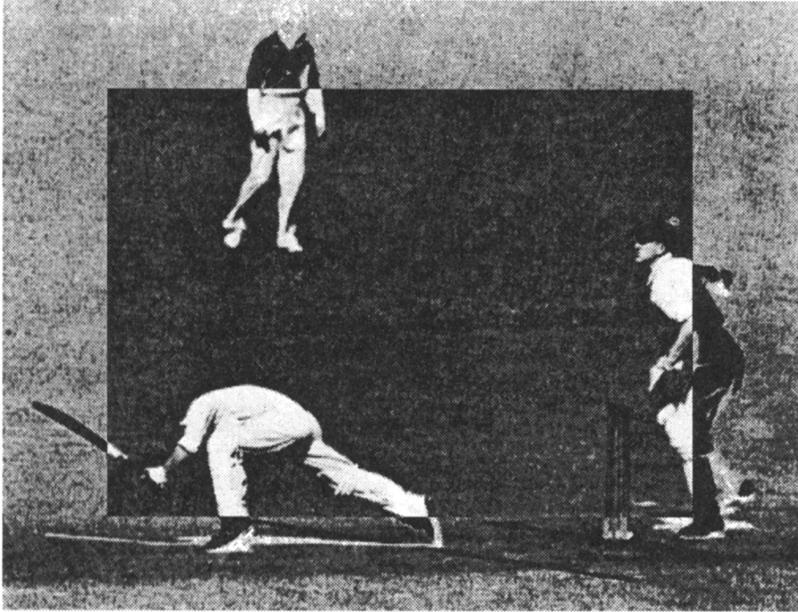

—George C. Rabel, Anderson University

“Historians and novelists have written about the Black Patch War since the 1930s, but Waldrep has written an account of that episode that exceeds all others in terms of research, detailed coverage, and insight. He has presented a great deal of new material on the subject, and he has developed an analysis that places the Black Patch War in a broad and meaningful context.”—William F. RONALD AMINZADE

Using class analysis to understand the dynamics of political conflict in mid-nineteenth-century France, Ronald Aminzade explores political activity among workers in three industrialized French cities—Toulouse, Saint-Étienne, and Rouen. Challenging traditional theories of industrialization and revolution, Aminzade innovatively uses narratives to provide a historically grounded analysis of the failed municipal revolutions of 1871 and the triumph of liberal-democratic institutions in France.
