COVER

Xiang Ren reviews Hutong Mushroom, a publication that shifts the prevailing academic focus on Beijing's traditional courtyard house to the informal contemporary conservation of 'grassroots architecture' through drawing and modelling practice. See pp. 295–298.

leader	219	The thinking diagram perspective	220	The interiors of a revolution: space, design, and politics at the Egg Stefano Corbo criticism	226	Sverre Fehn's Brussels and Venice pavilions: the process of becoming different Pedram Ghelichi and Jingxiang Zhu offer a comparative investigation of the processes of design for Fehn's two pavilions, demonstrating a critical shift in how construction can be projected as the thoughtful accommodation of indeterminacy.
history	239	Arata Isozaki: the architect as artist Hyunjung Cho examines how Arata Isozaki's intensive collaborations with Japanese vanguard artists enabled him to develop a new design concept known as "invisible city," imagined as a space of cybernetic interaction.
	251	From classrooms to Centres: Mary and David Medd's contribution to postwar school design in Britain Paula Lacomba Montes and Alejandro Campos Uribe report on the innovative school design strategies of Mary and David Medd, that broke away from the idea of classrooms and incorporated the concept of Centres in architectural discourse.
practice	265	Briefing a children's hospice: bridging the evidence gap and redefining value in contemporary healthcare design Rebecca McLaughlan and Alan Pert question how we can evaluate healthcare settings where guidelines are absent, offering a reconceptualisation of the built environment's value as a support for well-being.
urbanism	277	Democracy, discourse, and design: Cape Town's (re)turn to public space Sharóne L. Tomer shows how, as apartheid ended, architects and planners in Cape Town turned to public space to address legacies of inequality, through methods that reflected the new democracy's aspirations and limitations.
reviews	291	The I'Ansons: A Dynasty of London Architects & Surveyors Joshua Maddell
	295	Hutong Mushroom Xiang Ren
	299	Carlo Scarpa and Castelveccchio Revisited Nathaniel Coleman
