Movement Disorders

A Neuropsychiatric Approach

by JAMES B. LOHR and ALEXANDER A. WISNIEWSKI

Although psychiatry and neurology are considered as separate disciplines, there are many areas in which they overlap and merge into 'neuropsychiatry', a subject rapidly becoming a science in its own right. Movement disorders is one of the most important areas of overlap — for example tics, hypokinesia and stereotypies are all clinical signs found in both psychiatry and neurological illnesses. This volume is a comprehensive discussion of motor disorders covering both neurological and psychiatric aspects, providing the clinician with a source of information on diagnosis, pathophysiology and treatment.

Partial Contents: AN INTRODUCTION TO MOVEMENT: A Brief History of Disorders of Movement; An Overview of the Anatomical and Physiological Basis of Movement; SIGNS AND SYMPTOMS OF DISORDERED MOVEMENT: Increased Movement: Chorea, Athetosis and Ballismus; Hyperactivity, Akathisia and Related Conditions; Tremor; Bruxism; Tics and Related Conditions; Complex Repetitive Movements; Cataplexy, Hyperekplexia and Related Conditions; Myoclonus; Decreased Movement: Hypokinesia; Catalepsy; Negativism; Disordered Muscle Tone: Dystonia; Rigidity and Hypotonia; Disordered Complex Motor Performance: Disorders of Expression; Disorders of Posture and Gait.
