

NOTES ON THE CONTRIBUTORS

FRANCINE MASIELLO is Professor of Spanish American Literature and Chair of the Department of Comparative Literature at the University of California at Berkeley. Her most recent book is Between Civilization and Barbarism: Women, Nation, and Culture in Modern Argentina (1992).

JEAN-PIERRE BASTIAN is Professor of Latin American History at the Universidad Autónoma Metropolitana, Iztapalapa in Mexico City. His book Los disidentes, sociedades protestantes y revolución en México, 1872–1911 was recently issued in a second edition by the Fondo de Cultura Económica.

KATHLEEN ANN MYERS is an associate professor at Indiana University in Bloomington. She has published several studies on colonial Latin American nuns. Her book-length study of the writings of Madre María de San José will be published by Indiana University Press. She has also published articles on Fernández de Oviedo and is writing a monograph on this Spanish historian.

JORGE GELMAN teaches colonial American history at the Universidad de Buenos Aires and conducts research for the Instituto de Historia Argentina y Americana Dr. Emilio Ravignani. Currently a visiting professor at the Universidad de Girona in Spain, he has published various studies on the colonial society and economy of the Río de la Plata region.

EDWIN ELOY AGUILAR is a graduate of the University of Texas–Pan American and a doctoral candidate in Political Science at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. His dissertation focuses on political implications of the informal economy in Costa Rica.

JOSE MIGUEL SANDOVAL graduated from the Universidad de Chile and holds two master's degrees from the University of Sussex. A data analyst, archivist, and instructor at the Institute for Research in Social Science at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, he is currently studying women's voting behavior in Chile and public opinion of ethnic communities in the United States.

TIMOTHY J. STEIGENGA, a graduate of Calvin College, is a doctoral candidate in Political Science at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. His dissertation will compare the political effects of Protestantism in two contrasting polities, Costa Rica and Guatemala.

KENNETH M. COLEMAN is Professor of Political Science and Associate Director of the Institute of Latin American Studies at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. He is currently studying the informal economies of Central America as well as religion and politics.

EDWARD E. TELLES is Assistant Professor in the Department of Sociology at the University of California, Los Angeles. He is currently conducting a national survey in Brazil on racial attitudes and citizenship in collaboration with the Centro para o Estudo de Opinião Pública at the Universidade Estadual de Campinas (UNICAMP).

SUEANN CAULFIELD is a Ph.D. candidate and graduate fellow at New York University, working under the direction of Professor Warren Dean. She recently completed research for her dissertation in Rio de Janeiro under the auspices of a Fulbright Dissertation Grant and a New York University Dean's Dissertation Fellowship. Her research focuses on competing definitions of feminine honor and gender roles in Rio de Janeiro from 1920 to 1940.

HEATHER FOWLER-SALAMINI is Professor of History at Bradley University. She has written Agrarian Radicalism in Veracruz, 1920–1938 and essays on Veracruz, Tamaulipas, and Michoacán in postrevolutionary Mexico. She is currently coediting a manuscript on Mexican rural women from 1850 to 1990.

STEPHEN D. MORRIS directs the International Studies Program and is Assistant Professor of Political Science at the University of South Alabama. He wrote Corruption and Politics in Contemporary Mexico (which was also published in Spanish in 1992) and is currently working on a book on reformism in Mexico. In 1991–92, he served as a Fulbright lecturer at the Instituto de Estudios Económicos y Regionales (INESER) at the Universidad de Guadalajara.

ROBERTO P. KORZENIEWICZ teaches sociology at Albion College. He has published essays on labor in Argentina in several journals on Latin America. His current research focuses on competition and innovation among export enterprises in Latin America.

TERRY J. PEAVLER is Professor of Spanish at Penn State University. He has published numerous articles in various professional journals. His recent books include Individuations: The Novel as Dissent; El texto en llamas: el arte narrativo de Juan Rulfo; and Julio Cortázar.

JAMES D. COCHRANE is Professor of Political Science at Tulane University. He recently coauthored Political Culture and Foreign Policy in Latin America.

SILVIA BORZUTZKY teaches political science at the University of Pittsburgh. She has written several articles on Chilean politics and social security policies in Latin America.

ALLAN METZ is an assistant professor and reference librarian at Drury College in Springfield, Missouri. The author of Leopoldo Lugones y los judíos: las contradicciones del nacionalismo argentino (Buenos Aires: Editorial Milá, 1992), he has also published articles in a variety of journals. His research interests include church-state relations in Mexico, Israeli politics, and Argentine history and politics.