

Studies in American Political Development

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS

Editors

Karen Orren, University of California, Los Angeles
Stephen Skowronek, Yale University

Studies in American Political Development publishes high quality scholarship covering American political change and institutional development from a historical perspective. Articles focus on government institutions and their social, economic and cultural environment. The journal features in-depth original articles, which allow scholars to elaborate on the complex patterns of state-society relations. These longer articles also encourage an interdisciplinary approach—tying in relevant issues and related themes. In addition, SAPD recognizes the importance of comparative politics to the study of American institutions.

FERTILITY DECLINE AND THE IDEOLOGY
OF CLASS IN SICILY, 1860-1980

Jane C. Schneider & Peter T. Schneider

Examining population changes in a single Sicilian community between 1860 and 1980, the authors offer an extended review and critique of existing models of fertility decline in Europe, proposing a new interpretation that emphasizes historical context and class relations.

The Reformation and Rural Society

The Parishes of Brandenburg-Ansbach-Kulmbach, 1528-1603

C. Scott Dixon

This book examines the relationship between the Reformation movement of the sixteenth century and the rural population of Germany. The experience of the Reformation by the average villager is described, and an attempt is made to understand the villagers in their own terms.

Land, Custom and Practice in the South Pacific

R. Gerard Ward and Elizabeth Kingdon, Editors

This book argues that in the South Pacific Islands, land formerly held by community groups under traditional forms of tenure is now often being privatized. The authors present case studies from four countries, and examine parallels from other regions experiencing comparable socio-economic forces.

Labour, Science and Technology in the Age of Valois and Bourbon, 1500-1620

Henry Heller

In this detailed study, Heller challenges the dominant approach to the history of early modern France, that of the Annales school, with its emphasis on long-term economic and cultural forces. He reexamines the history of the sixteenth and early seventeenth centuries in France, and finds a surprising degree of economic, technological and scientific innovation.

PROGRAM IN AGRARIAN STUDIES YALE UNIVERSITY

The Program in Agrarian Studies at Yale is an experimental, interdisciplinary effort to reshape how a new generation of scholars understands rural life and society. The many hands from many disciplines that have shaped this Program share three premises. The first is that any satisfactory analysis of agrarian development must begin with the lived experience, understandings, and values of its historical subjects. The second premise is that the study of the Third World (and what was, until recently, called the Second World) must never be segregated from the historical study of the West, or the humanities from the social sciences. Finally, we are convinced that the only way to loosen the nearly hegemonic grip of the separate disciplines on how questions are framed and answered is to concentrate on themes of signal importance to several disciplines. By building a sustained community of interdisciplinary conversation and by demonstrating what creative trespassing can accomplish, we hope to set a standard of integrative work that will act as a magnet. The Program began with academic year 1991-92 thanks to support from the Rockefeller Foundation, the Ford Foundation, and Yale University.

COLLOQUIUM SERIES The core of the Program's activities is a weekly colloquium organized around an annual theme. Invited specialists send papers in advance which are the focus of an organized discussion by faculty and graduate students. "Hinterlands, Frontiers, Cities, and States: Transactions and Identities" is our theme for the next two years. This topic would embrace, inter alia, the study of mutual perceptions between countryside and city, and patterns of cultural and material exchange, extraction, migration, credit, legal systems, and political order that link them. It would also include an understanding of how different societies conceive of the spatial order they exhibit. What terms are meaningful and how are they related, e.g. frontier, wilderness, arable, countryside, city, town, agriculture, commerce, 'hills,' lowlands, maritime districts, inland? How have these meanings changed historically and what symbolic and material weight do they bear? We hope the colloquium will become an important audience for the best work on this subject from any historical period, region, or discipline.

PROGRAM FELLOWS The program appoints Research Fellows annually who are in residence for the year, present a paper, and attend the colloquia. Ordinarily, we hope to have four to six Fellows whose diversity reflects the breadth of the program and a Senior Fellow who has already made an important contribution to agrarian studies. Fellows are selected competitively. For information about application procedures and deadlines, write directly to the Program in Agrarian Studies, Box 208300, New Haven, CT 06520-8300, USA.

Citizen and Subject

Contemporary Africa and the Legacy of Late Colonialism

Mahmood Mamdani

In analyzing the obstacles to democratization in post-independence Africa, Mahmood Mamdani offers a bold, insightful account of colonialism's legacy.

"This book explores a provocative and original thesis about African politics, with the vigor and rigor that readers of Professor Mamdani's earlier work will expect. Anyone who cares to understand the state in contemporary Africa—anyone who wants to understand the current situation on the continent at all—would do well to read this new book."

What Was Socialism, and What Comes Next?

Katherine Verdery

In this collection of essays dealing with the aftermath of Soviet-style socialism and the different forms that may replace it, Katherine Verdery explores the nature of socialism in order to understand more fully its consequences.

"Katherine Verdery's intimate knowledge of Romania, her thorough grounding in the contemporary concerns of both classical anthropology and current 'transitionology,' and her ability to write clear and convincing prose give her book unusual power." —Gale Stokes

Sugar Island Slavery in the Age of Enlightenment

The Political Economy of the Caribbean World

Arthur L. Stinchcombe

Plantations, especially sugar plantations, created slave societies and a racism persisting well into post-slavery periods: so runs a familiar argument that has been used to explain the sweep of Caribbean history. Here an eminent scholar of modern social theory applies this assertion to a comparative study of Caribbean islands from the time of the American Revolution to the Spanish American War.

"This is an absolutely characteristic project by one of the world's great sociologists: it and he are original, bold, and resourceful." —Charles Tilly

The Power and Prevalence of Evil
in Our Age

Daniel Chirot

"Chirot's insightful book looks squarely at radical evil . . . and warns us of the array of new onslaughts against democratic values and governments that are to be expected from various quarters, most often in the name of some collective identity or self-styled expression of community."

COMPARATIVE STUDIES IN SOCIETY AND HISTORY

ISSN 0010-4175

Founded by Sylvia L. Thrupp

Comparative Studies in Society and History is a forum for presentation and discussion of new research into problems of change and stability that recur in human societies through time or in the contemporary world. It sets up a working alliance between specialists in all branches of the social sciences and humanities. Debate and review articles bring the general reader in touch with current findings and issues.

NOTES FOR CONTRIBUTORS

Contributions may be descriptive, analytical, or theoretical. Any article not in itself comparative may be accepted if it lends itself to comment that will place it in comparative perspective. Correspondence with the editors prior to the submission of articles will help to enable them to obtain such comment or a companion study. Emphasis in comparative studies may be either on similarities or, if these are significant enough and call for some recasting of generalizations, on differences. All contributions and editorial correspondence should be sent to the Editors, Comparative Studies in Society and History, 102 Rackham Building, University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Michigan 48109-1070.

Two copies of each contribution, preferably accompanied by a stamped, addressed envelope, should be submitted. Both text and footnotes should be clearly typed with double spacing and wide margins; footnotes should appear on separate pages at the end of the article. Illustrations may be included by arrangement with the editors.
