* Here, at last, Whiting's entire output for the theatre is *

When New York City Center Renovated

A busy theatre like New York's 2,700-seat City Center needs all the flexibility it can get. The house plays a ballet season, an opera company, a series of musicals and a wide variety of other attractions.

The resistance dimming system in the theatre required six men to operate and was cumbersome and imprecise.

Kliegl Brothers installed a new system this past summer which gave the City Center 100 control channels (operated through its own modern console) a ten-scene pre-set and a remarkable matrix panel that gave the lighting designers use of 162 dimmers.

Kliegl's system requires only two or three operators for maximum use . . . a substantial saving in direct labor cost. It occupies 40% less space than the old system did.

The system is based around Kliegl's famous "SCR DimmerSM", which has built-in automatic current sensing, is insensitive to load variations and does not generate the electrical or RFI noise often associated with SCR units.

Kliegl Brothers is preparing a booklet describing the City Center renovation more fully than is possible in this space. Please write or call Kliegl Brothers (Att: Dr. Joel Rubin, Vice-Pres.) for your free advance copy.
